I'm calling to say that I don't think that men should have been excluded from the Take Back the Night march, I don't know if Ordinary Women is a campus organization, but if they are, I don't see how they could possibly exclude men from a public event.

I would just like to say to Michael Noll that he did an excellent job on writing the article about Coach Forbes. Coach Forbes is an excellent coach and should be welldeserved of everything.

Day right out of movies offers time for reflection

Entering Warsaw, I knew the translation of "What Women Want" in six languages. Surely Mel Gibson himself couldn't be more impressed. Gibson's portrait, complete with the text, now had grabbed my attention in German, Czech, Greek, Hungarian, Polish and, of course, However, in Poland, I learned something. No amount of knowledge is any good without properly exercising it.

I had a simple exercise - a 21st birthday phone call for a friend. The call was to be completed from Krakow, Poland, to Manhattan, Kan., at 8 p.m. Poland time (high noon in Manhattan) on March 31, 2001.

The largest problem appeared to be the Polish phone system. Because I had no knowledge of the difficulties to complete a call, I acquired a cell phone activated for Poland. It seemed as if I was ready. The movie now could begin.

I returned from a day of touring the Krakow ghetto, where Steven Spielberg needed few props when he filmed "Schindler's List." Some of the buildings were dilapidated, and all looked like they had appeared in the movie. The cloudy weather added the depressing effects.

Shortly before 8 p.m., I tried to place the call. Again and again, the phone spouted various Czech statements at me for nearly an hour. It all translated into my phone not working. Later, I learned I had to have the right activation codes.

In true cinematic style, it began to rain. A beautiful downpour soaked me as I attempted to use a friend's phone card. He had purchased the card in Warsaw, so I thought surely this would work. Wrong. It didn't have enough credit to call the United States. Time for plan

Back out into the rain I went, thinking, "Surely if I am in a movie, it's got to have a happy ending." I borrowed a different phone card. Back to the phone booth, where I cradled an AT&T card. I punched in the connection codes and heard a ring. And then another. The beginning of many rings. It seemed as if AT&T wasn't really looking to give this woman what she wanted, or make me a movie star.

Defeated, I returned home at 11 p.m. Basically, my life that evening was a three-hour movie with an unhappy ending. I remembered her joking, "If you don't call me on my birthday, I'll assume the Nazis put you in a camp."

Funny at the time, but a dark and disturbing comment while in Poland.

The next day I visited Auschwitz-Birkenau. Upon entering the gates, history came alive. The sun shown brightly as I anyone could. joke about this place.

After 56 years,

Auschwitz stands mostly as a reminder. As George Santayana said, "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it." Spielberg chose to remind people by shooting in black and white, for Auschwitz today looks the same in black and white as it did in 1944. I shivered walking past a building. It was marked - "The their mothers with phenol injections here." The solemn sadness also forced me to think. Adolf Hitler once said, "It is such good fortune for people in power that people do not think." To avoid another Holocaust, we all should think and not live blindly to what happened. Hitler's thinking - the same thinking that caused the Holocaust - still exists. It is rooted in a religion-based anti-Semitism that keeps all contemporary lews accountable for what some Jews might or might not have done a long time ago. Jews might have killed Christ. But how should they be thought

Charlie Ward's recent comments tend to reflect most of society who don't realize they may have feelings of anti-Semitism. His comments make me question how far we have come since the Holocaust.

It now is possible to believe anti-Semitism will last as long as the bible from which it is rooted. Nazis were not the only people who fostered anti-Semitism.

If Spielberg's cameras were switched to color film, would anyone realize the Holocaust could happen today? Are we remembering any of the horror and doing anything about it?

No amount of knowledge is any good without properly exercising it. What will you do with your knowledge? Use some critical thinking.

Adulthood does not mean abandoning childhood fun

When I was visiting my family over Easter, I had one of those moments in life when you suddenly realize things aren't the way they used to be. In the blink of an eye, an epiphany hit me. I realized I'm not a kid anymore.

Somewhere in the past couple of years, I've grown up. I'm not sure when exactly it happened, but it did. It's been a gradual process that has just sort of crept up on me. I didn't even notice it until my family's reactions reflected the fact.

It wasn't any huge gesture on my family's behalf that made me realize it. No one said, "Hey, Sarah, you're an adult now." It was much more subtle than that. My cousin, who is 14 years older than me, was telling me all about her love life, and my aunt was asking me for advice on how to do her makeup.

It was then that I realized I'm hold onto his on my way to becoming a grown up. I'm in the process of taking those first tottering, uncertain steps out into the real world. And you know what? The whole idea of being an adult kind of Being an adult means being responsible. You have to get a real job, pay the bills and, somewhere down the line, think about starting a family. It's a little frightening to think I'll be out in the real world in two years, living on my own and repaying all of my student loans.

My mild panic at the thought of having to be a responsible citizen subsided a little when I thought about my dad. My dad is like an 18-year-old guy stuck in a 49-year-old's body. Despite the responsibilities of being an adult, my dad has managed to

One example of this is my dad's way of answering the phone. It's not the way your typical parental unit would answer their child's phone call. When my dad knows it's me calling, he doesn't say "Hi" or "Hello." He says "Wassup?" like the guys on the Budweiser commercial. He sometimes even does the "How are you doing?"

That's the kind of adult I want to be, I want to stay young at heart. I don't want to let all of the scary stuff that comes with being a grown up kill my free spirit. I've seen it happen to

I'm having a blast living my life right now, but I don't want these to be my glory days. I want to be a fun adult. I want to be like Uncle Joey on "Full House" or Robin Williams in "Hook" after he went back to Nevernever Land.

I think it's all about being young at heart. Little kids have so much fun with their lives. With all of the day-to-day troubles we deal with as we get older, we can easily lose that childlike freedom and optimism about the world. It's important to keep our inner child close to our hearts and let it take the reins occasionally.

Sometimes it's just as important to watch Saturday morning cartoons as it is to watch CNN. You're never too old to jump on the bed or run through the sprinklers, either.

To me, growing up and staying young at heart is all about balance. You can't let the little things weigh your spirit down. You have to enjoy life's moments, not fret about the details.

Increase in daily bike riders needed for parking solution

I love to go outdoors and do different things, one of which is to ride my bicycle. I am writing this letter to request help in speeding up the master bicycle plan in the city of Manhattan.

First of all, in deciding who can help with this movement, we all should look in the mirror. It starts with all of us. Many of us do have bikes but tend not to ride them because the city does not incorporate bicycles into the overall traffic situation. Many times while riding my own bike, it is almost as if I am in an obstacle course, trying to avoid cars while finding a path on which to ride.

Therefore, if people would ride their bikes more, there would be fewer cars, which would mean less danger.

This would solve our parking problem as well. I do not think I ever have seen a person waiting for another to pull out of the bicycle rack because it was too full. With more people riding their bikes and taking advantage of the implementations, it will show there is a demand for more bicycle provisions. I believe that if there was an effort made by not only students but also Manhattan residents to ride their bikes more, this bicycle master plan would take effect more quickly. Second, when trying to figure out why we should push for more implementations, we need look no further than parking lots around the city. We all know the campus here is packed full of cars every day. But look at other establishments around town. You always have to walk when parking at Wal-Mart, unless you get lucky and someone is pulling out of a spot right up front, and even Aggieville is packed, not so much during the day, but at night.

Finally, when figuring out how this should be accomplished, it is rather simple. There needs to be some form of funds that are allocated towards the bicycle plan alone.

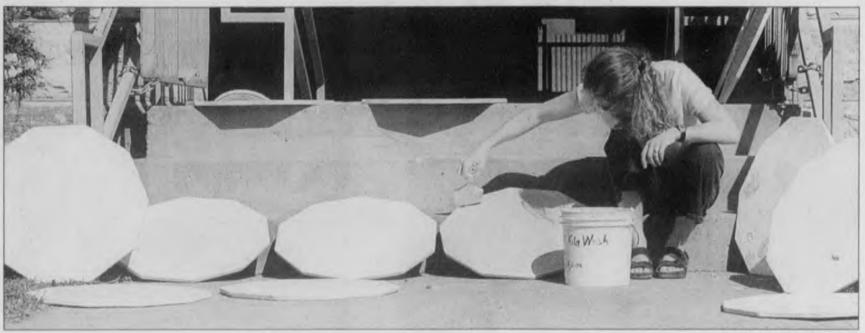

Money is the biggest problem when trying to implement a plan. According to Karen McCulloh, who is the former mayor of Manhattan, there is no committee, nor is there any budget for this bicycle plan.

She also says there is a quality of Life Bond Issue that deals with numerous things, and hopefully, the bicycle plan can get some money from this. As with many things, money is holding this plan back. There is a linear bike trail that is supposed to go around the city. It is not completely finished because of lack of funds. I hope it soon will be finished because it is a nice place to go and be away from the traffic.

In conclusion, I ask that you do take into account the numerous benefits of this bicycle plan and start to ride bicycles more. I am not saying everyone has to ride his or her bike everyday, all the time. People just need to realize that riding bikes can not only help their health, but also can help the whole community. As with all campus and community issues that have been brought up and spoken about, this one is no different. It will take a desire by all for the bicycle plan to be implemented more rapidly. Therefore, I ask you all to work together and we will see more development in this community dealing with bicycles.

Texas University apartment

By NATALIE GOTT The Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas - A fire broke out Tuesday at a high-rise luxury apartment building for University of Texas students, killing one student and critically injuring another.

The three-alarm blaze was reported about 6:20 a.m. at the privately operated University Towers. The fire was under control in a half-hour.

A student was found in his room and was pronounced dead at a hospital. His name was not released. Another student, Zawardy Ab Latiff, was hospitalized with third-degree

The cause of the blaze was under investigation. The fire was confined to a second-floor unit of the two-tower complex, which houses 600 students, fire department spokesman Gary Wilks

The 10-story building near the UT campus was built before a 1981 ordinance that required all high-rises to have sprinklers. The building had the required smoke detectors in each room and a 24-hour monitored alarm

The emergency lighting system and the fire alarm in the hall outside the room where the blaze broke out melted, but the alarm sounded, Wilks

Wilks would not speculate on whether sprinklers would have prevented the death. He said the building had passed inspection twice in the past two months and that officials had planned to return Tuesday.

Inspectors had found minor infractions, and none of these items could have changed the outcome of these events, said Kevin Baum, assistant fire

Freshman Tom Bagby said he was studying in the mezzanine area when the fire broke out. As Bagby ran upstairs to get his girlfriend from a seventh-fluor room, he saw his friends rushing downstairs.

"They couldn't believe I was going up the stairs," said Bagby, who used to live in the room in which the fire broke out. "They said smoke was pouring out of the room."

The building's Web site promotes the place as Austin's most luxurious student accommodations. Rent ranges up to $17,400 per year for amenities. such as a 24-hour computer lab and a swimming pool.

Religious rally brings students building burns, kills student together to celebrate their faith

Kansas State Collegian

The idea for Flock, a religious rally, started with a friendly conversation in a local laundry mat.

"I was just talking to a friend about how I would love to bring together a bunch of people to celebrate their faith," said leremy Barrand, senior in pastoral ministries at Manhattan Christian College. 'It turned out, he had a friend that had a similar vision."

Barrand then contacted Julie Graves, junior in apparel design, about organizing the event.

"I was a little surprised when Jeremy first called me.' Graves said. "Honestly, though, I had been praying that God would show me someone else with the same vision so we could organize this event."

The rally, scheduled for Aug. 25, was created with the goal of promoting unity on campus among Christian groups. 'We want to have a fresh, positive atmosphere that will allow people to share their beliefs," Barrand said, "It is free for anybody who wants to come - MCC students, K-State students and the community."

The event is tentatively scheduled to start at 3 p.m. at Memorial Stadium.

"That will just be a relaxing. get-together time before the real fun starts," Barrand said. Later that evening, speakers and local bands will alternate. Bernard Franklin, chaplain for the Kansas City Chiefs; Ken Canfield, author and professional speaker, and K-State football players Jon McGraw, Andy Eby and Andrew Shull will be the guest speakers for the event

"They are going to be giving testimonies about their experience with their religion." said Hannah Canfield, sophomore in social work and organizer for the rally

Three bands are scheduled to perform: however, Sabbath Rest, a local Christian band, is the only one that is definite at

"The whole thing is really starting to come together.' Barrand said. "We are really just looking at details now."

The organizers said they hope many people will attend the fally.

"We really want to bring the Christians together to create unity and show a positive atmosphere," Graves said. "We especially want to gear it toward incoming freshmen to share with them the groups that are on campus and how they can become involved."

Graduates honored at send-off

By KAREN MAYSE Kansas State Collegian

Graduating K-State seniors will get their first alumni experience at the annual KSU Alumni Association Senior Send-off on Friday.

From 5 to 7 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum, there will be free pizza and beer for all graduating seniors. There will be a limit of two beers per person, and identification will be checked at the door.

The Alumni Association also is planning to give away door prizes and announce Anderson Awards for outstanding seniors.

Graduating seniors must have a ticket to be admitted free. Tickets must be picked up from the Alumni Association office by 5 p.m. May 10.

Non-traditional students are welcome to bring their families. Guests will be admitted for $5 per guest, and children under 4 will be admitted free.

"Normally, we have it outside. This year, we're going to have it indoors, so we don't have to deal with the weather," said Ryan Schletzbaum, Student Alumni Board member and sophomore in mathematics and secondary education.

Schletzbaum said there are about 30 students on the board, and all of them will be helping at the event. Seniors will want to attend the event in part because it's free, he said.

"I think it's a good way to end your time at K-State," Schletzbaum said.

About 800 students attended the event last year.

"It was a fun event because it was at the end of the year, and it was one of the last times you were around before you graduated." said Kristin Boyd, who graduated last spring with a bachelor's degree in journalism and mass communications.

> t wasn't quite what the K-State baseball team expected Tuesday afternoon at Frank Myers Field.

Coming off a three-game sweep of the Missouri Tigers just last weekend and winners of 12 of their last 14 ballgames, it seemed like the Cats had hit their stride.

That is, of course, until the Wichita State Shockers came calling.

Today, we played terrible and just didn't compete in any aspect of our game, and that's what happens," senior Josh Cavender said after the 13-3 loss. "Some people went out there and thought they could just show up and win the ballgame, and you can't do that. It's just not going to happen.'

It just didn't happen in a lot of ways for K-State

After the Wildcats drew first blood in the second inning with a two-run blast off the bat off senior Mark English, his fourth in four games, the wheels fell off the train.

K-State starter Jared Brite worked two relatively harmless innings before giving up five runs without recording a single out in the top half of the third to start the Shocker scoring blitz.

"I thought I got off to a pretty good start, but I lost a little bit there in the third and couldn't regain control." the freshman said afterward.

Sophomore Spencer Black didn't fare much better in his relief appearance, giving up four more runs on three hits before the damage was done. After three short innings, the Shockers already led by seven, 9-2, on eight hits, seven of which came in the third.

"They just went through a tough weekend where they couldn't get the key hit," head coach Mike Clark said. "They balanced that out today when everybody was getting the key hit in that nine-run inning. You take that nine-run inning out of there, and it's a pretty even ballgame.

Even Wichita State head coach Gene Stephenson was amazed at the Shockers' explosion at the plate.

"We haven't had a nine-run week in a while." he said. "We haven't done anything at all lately, so I was pleased with that, obviously Stephenson said he was pleased with his pitching as well. WSU starter John Tetuan gave the Shockers seven strong innings before giving way to Reuben Kerbs in the eighth. Tetuan gave up just four hits and struck out six Cats on the day.

"I thought Tetuan was very good, and nobody really knew where the strike zone was," Clark said. "He just did a great job of putting it in there, and

K-State tennis players named Big 12 position champions

Kansas State Collegian

Six K-State tennis players were named Big 12 Conference position champions at the annual student-athlete banquet, which took place during the Big 12 Championships this past weekend.

In singles, junior Petra Sedlmajerova earned runner-up at the No. 2 position, senior Eva Novotna' tied for No. 3 champion and junior Kathy Chuda was named No. 4 champion. Sedlmajerova posted 20 wins this season, including a 9-2 Big 12 record, and was named to the All-Big 12 Singles Team along with senior Alena Jecminkova. Novotna' has a team-high 23 victories and also finished with a 9-2 conference record. Chuda earned 17 wins and also went 9-2 in the Big 12.

In doubles, Jecminkova and Novotna were named No. 1 position champions. Freshmen Hayley McIver and Paulina Castillejos tied as the No. 3 champions. Jecminkova and Novotna' won 16 matches overall and eight in Big 12 play and were named to the All-Big 12 Doubles Team. McIver and Castillejos earned 12 wins overall, including an 8-3 Big 12 mark.

K-State (12-10 overall) now is ranked No. 51, and Jecminkova is ranked No. 90 as an individual. The Cats will find out Thursday whether they are selected for a NCAA Regional Tournament berth or a NCAA Championships individual selection.

Columnist makes wish list for K-State

To tell the truth - there's just not much to say this week. Sure, there's plenty going on in the sports world, but I can't seem to think of anything but Scantron sheets and study guides as I trudge through another "dead" week full of homework and optional (?) assignments.

So, in my parting . shots to you, the faithful Collegian following, I bid you adieu with a list of secret, naughty little things I wish were part of the K-State sports scene:

SWIMMING POOLS AND BEACH PARTIES Though K-State's baseball stadium is well on its way to becoming one of the most impressive venues in the Big 12 for the world's greatest sport, it still bears the tag "work in progress.

Therefore, it is my suggestion that the dirt pile behind the third base foul line be transformed into a beach, complete with sand pit and a couple of kiddie pools to accommodate hot fans, a la Arizona's Bank One

Ballpark. The "Dan Smith Sand 'n' Sun Fun Area," as it would be called, would be open during the hot summer months as an added tourist attraction to

Manhattan

THE RE-CREATION OF AHEARN MAGIC If you've ever seen pictures of Ahearn Field House when it was packed, long before the existence of Bramlage Coliseum, you probably had chills.

The crowds Ahearn held and the teams that played in the facility resulted in a truly magical mood of which even those who didn't enjoy K-State sports took notice.

K-State's volleyball and track and field teams still enjoy that atmosphere, but what made the building special to begin with was basketball.

Since head coach Jim Wooldridge's main goal is to bring back the good of days of Wildcat basketball glory, why not move one game a year back inside Ahearn and lower admission to 1950s

Failure to mention the 6-foot-3inch, 200-pound senior sparked a question from the front row, concerning why the three-year letterman had been disregarded.

Snyder's answer was simple as he drew the comparison to former Cat safety and First-Team All-Big 12 performer Lamar Chapman (1996-to know that my teammates see me in that light, as a leader, and want me to take on that responsibility," McGraw said. "And I'm going to do everything I can on and off the field to fulfill those expectations." It's almost like he is that hometown hero, McGraw said, as he's felt the community behind him the whole time he's worked his way up through the program. "It's nice to see your hard work and everything pay off that you've put into it. Manhattan and Riley are great, great towns. I've enjoyed getting to hang around here over these past four years and enjoyed the support that all the fans have given me.

And hopefully, I can go out and give them something to cheer about next year."

have that much more to play for.

Bragging rights in the family make the rivalry even better."

Though Nick has two years on his cousin, the younger relative already is competing for the spot as the family's best hitter - Nick entered the game with a .315 mark.

"He's always been real good," Nick said. "He's always been a great athlete - I just hadn't seen him play in a while, so I didn't know the extent of how good he was."

Even in Utah, which the Sorensens call home, it was a rare occasion to see Nick and Logan on the same field. That, coupled with the already historic rivalry between their respective schools, has made for an interesting couple of days, Logan said. "It's always fun. We haven't had a lot of opportunities, even with both of us growing up in Utah because he was always a couple years older than me," he said. "I can only remember a couple of times when we've actually played against each other, but it's a rivalry, especially between Wichita and

Kansas State.' Still, Logan and Nick have a while to go before they are considered as good as another Sorensen, Nick's brother, Zach. Shockers coach Gene Stephenson said he remembers the eldest Sorensen, an All-American at WSU in 1998. "One of my all-time favorite players was Zach Sorensen, and I mean that sincerely," he said. "He was such a great young man - a hardnosed, competitive player, and he represented the very best in youth in the country at that time.

With the success Zach had as a Shocker, it's no wonder that Logan chose the black and gold of WSU, but when he first arrived, Stephenson said, the Shocker coaches thought they had a pitcher instead of an infielder.

"When we got Logan, we thought he was going to be a great pitcher for us," he said. "Instead, he has played better than any first baseman that we've had in a while, defensively, and he's really come around, offensively."

Though the ears of the Sorensen family were glued to the radio in Utah, Logan said, others at Frank Myers Field on Tuesday afternoon might have noticed some other connections between the two teams.

Junior Luke Robertson also had a brother, Nate, play for Stephenson's program. After earning honorable mention Freshman All-American as a relief pitcher in 1997 for the Shockers, he moved on to the professional ranks and now plays in the Florida Marlins' minor league system.

Luke also spent time with the Shockers as a walk-on freshman in 1998. Though he might not get the chance to start against his former team, Robertson said it would be great to see some time in Wednesday's game if it works out that way.

"Being able to go home and pitch in front of my home crowd and my family and friends would be a big deal to me," he said, "but conference games are more important than nonconference ones, so hopefully, I can make an impact on Friday."

he threw well. We didn't have many quality at-bats, and he just had great stuff."

Rightfielder Pat Maloney and centerfielder Nick Sorensen were two of only four K-State batters to hit safely. Maloney's team-leading hitting streak was stretched to 19 games after a double in the second, and Sorensen reached on a single to right later in the inning.

"We got behind a little bit early, and it changed our whole approach to the game," Sorensen said. "We just got out of our whole game plan, and it messed us up. We need to take the same approach whether they score 25 runs or no runs.'

K-State will look to split the season series with the Shockers for the second straight year at 7 tonight from Eck Stadium in Wichita in preparation for this weekend's action with Big 12 and intrastate rival Kansas.

A GREATER RIVALRY AGAINST THE JAYHAWKS

Sure, K-State has turned into a football powerhouse, and KU seems to have as much potential on the gridiron as my freshman intramural team, but that doesn't mean we still can't hate them.

Now's the time to rekindle the flame. When KU comes to Manhattan on Friday for a baseball game with the Cats, go out and let them know they still aren't welcome in Manhattan. When the volleyball team squares off against the Jayhawks next season, sit as closely as you can to the bench and heckle to your heart's content.

There's never been a better time to hate the Jayhawks. In fact, the rivalry grows by the minute. Have purple pride, and learn to love hating everything that is crimson and blue.

A DEEP HATRED OF "THE GENERAL"

When Texas Tech hired Bobby Knight as its next head basketball coach earlier this season, it immediately meant more exposure for the Red Raiders and for the Big 12. K-State has played the Raiders more than any other Texas school in the Big 12. Although that alone doesn't beg for a rivalry, the fact that both schools have had coaching changes recently should produce some interesting contests. Any time two teams with relatively new coaches match up, there always is a chance for something to boil over. Wooldridge and Knight never have met in the Big 12, but both coaches are in charge of new squads, and that means a nasty war could be on the horizon.

So that's it. Another year at K-State in the books. Next year will be better, with new recruits, new expectations and new storylines let's just hope next year is as fun as this one was.

Republicans agree to support tax cut

By ALAN FRAM The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - House and Senate Republicans tentatively agreed Tuesday to push for an 11year, $1.35 trillion tax cut, GOP aides and lawmakers said.

The deal would give President Bush most of the tax reduction he wants and resolve one of the two outstanding issues blocking completion of a 2002 budget.

It also reflects the failure of the White House and Republican leaders to persuade Senate moderates of both parties to move much closer to the $1.6 trillion, 10-year tax reduction that had been the pillar of Bush's economic program since his presidential campaign.

Under the agreement, taxes would be cut by $1.25 trillion between 2002 and 2011 - $350 billion less than Bush had insisted on for more than a year. There also would be a $100 billion tax cut aimed at stimulating the economy that would be enacted this year but would cover 2001 and 2002.

Details of the agreement were disclosed by GOP aides and lawmakers speaking on condition of anonymity.

The pact underlines the clout moderates of both parties can wield in a Senate divided 50-50 between the two parties.

The more conservative House had approved Bush's full $1.6 trillion 10-year figure, and its leaders have been insisting they would like to see an even deeper tax reduction.

Asked by a reporter if he could accept the deal, House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, said, "Not very happily," and said, "You've got to have something. Something has got to pass both houses.

For weeks now, 16 Senate moderates - 14 Democrats and two Republicans - have refused to move any closer to Bush's proposal than $1.25 trillion over 10 years, plus more for a stimulus package.

Bush conceded last week that he would have to compromise on his $1.6 trillion proposal, the core of his economic plan. GOP bargainers spent the last few weeks hunting votes for between $1.3 trillion and $1.4 trillion in 10year reductions.

In the end, they had to settle for $1.25 trillion - still one of the biggest tax reductions in decades.

Lawmakers and aides from both parties said many of those moderates were expected to support the tax agreement, all but ensuring that a budget reflecting those figures would pass both chambers of Congress.

Asked about the deal, one of the moderates' leaders, Sen. John Breaux, D-La., said, "We're moving in a direction that would give us an agreement."

And Senate Majority Whip Don Nickles, R-Okla., said he expected a tax agreement to be announced later Tuesday.

"We'll come up with a good tax bill," Nickles said.

The budget is an outline that sets overall tax and spending figures and guides later tax and spending bills. GOP leaders want to send Bush a big tax bill by Memorial Day.

The tax figure in the budget is important because under congressional procedures, it ensures that a bill cutting taxes by that amount cannot be filibustered in the Senate. Filibusters are endless delays that can kill legislation and only can be ended with the votes of 60 of the 100 senators. In today's Senate, that would be impossible for Republicans to achieve if at least 10 Democrats did not go

Republicans hope to pass other tax bills - not protected from filibuster - in an attempt to boost this year's total tax cut.

With the tax question all but resolved. Republicans still had to work out internal conflicts over spending.

Bush proposed - and the House endorsed -keeping many programs to a 4 percent increase next year. The Senate approved a boost of more than 8 percent. The two sides were discussing ratcheting that back to about 5.2 percent, but talks still were under

Earlier Tuesday, Republican members of the Senate Finance Committee met to discuss how to fit Bush's tax priorities into the lower tax cut figure but reached no

A leading GOP moderate, Sen. Olympia Snowe of Maine, said the biggest issue is what to do about Bush's across-the-board income tax cut - particularly whether to drop the top 39.6 percent rate to 33 percent as the president wants or agree to a higher figure, perhaps 35 or 36 percent.

"It is the marginal rates around which everything revolves right now in terms of the centerpiece of the tax proposal," she said. "We really do need to make some adjustments to accommodate some other priorities and address the distribution issue of who gets this tax cut."

Sleep deprivation can hurt memory, learning

Kansas State Collegian

Sleep is overrated, some college students might say.

But, most experts say, sleep is essential for learning and memory.

Lack of sleep, something many college students experience this time of the semester, can lead to deterioration of memory, concentration and even emotional controls, said Dorinda Lambert. licensed psychologist and assistant director of clinical services for University Counseling Services.

"People who have extreme forms of sleep deprivation can really start having significant cognitive problems," Lambert

"They can get pretty irritable, They start to see things, hear things, and they'll be hypersensitive about things - even small things they used to be able to tolerate and cope with 'A lot of things I've just described probably describe a lot of college students," she said.

Different people need different amounts of sleep, but most healthy adults need eight hours of sleep. The range is between six and 10 hours, Lambert said.

Lost sleep often results because students feel like they can't say no - they want to do everything. Lambert said. They end up taking on too much and losing Nancy (Anna Bolz) tells Fagin (David Troup) she will not be a part of the plot against Oliver in the play "Oliver!" She later takes the boy to the bridge in an attempt to return him to his grandfather.

Musical twist

More than 60 work on local production of version of Dickens' novel

By BENJAMIN HODGE and JJ DUNCAN Kansas State Collegian

With more than 60 people working on the production, the cast of "Oliver!" easily can fill the stage at the Manhattan Arts Center.

"When the whole cast is out there, people are just over-awed at the size of this production," Anna Bolz, who plays Nancy, said.

Bolz, senior in music theater, said the cast is put to good use in the popular Lionel Bart. musical based on the Charles Dickens novel "Oliver Twist." They create the atmosphere of the shady slums of London in the mid-19th century with costumes meant for a more rugged, realistic setting, Bolz said.

"I'm a bar wench, so I wear this old dress with fluffy sleeves and a sash and a couple different skirts," she said. "In a lot of productions, they'll dress Nancy in satin, but in real life, she wouldn't have been able to afford anything like that. We're trying to keep the costumes a little more realistic."

"Oliver!" takes place in London during the 1850s, and it depicts how poorly many women and children were treated during the time period, producer Sheila Hochhauser said.

The music in "Oliver!" includes very memorable songs, she said. After only hearing the music to "Oliver!," she said, one would think the musical has an upbeat nature. Rather, the musical has a fairly stark tone, Hochhauser said.

All cast members are local talent and are volunteering their time. Several K-State students have leading roles in the musical.

Becky Dillon, senior in vocal performance, plays Widow Corney, who helps run the church-owned orphanage in which Oliver Twist, the main character, begins the musical. All age groups are in the cast, she said, including many young actors.

"There's lots and lots of little guys," she said. "It's been a lot of fun. We've been working on it since about the week after spring break.

> The musical of "Oliver!" differs from the movie version because it has more songs, and some of the characters are developed more. In this performance, there is more interaction between the characters and the audience than there would be in a Broadway perfor-

"When I sing 'Oom-pa-pa,' I'll go out and flirt a little bit with guys in the audience," she said. "Last Saturday, I sat on a guy's lap and sang some of the song to him. It's a lot of fun."

Oliver starts out in a workhouse before getting sold for five pounds by orphanage worker, Mr. Bumble. In "Oliver Twist," Dickens criticized the Church of England for its treatment of the orphan children at the time, Hochhauser said. She said there is a play on words that Dickens used in his novel: Mr. Bumble's official title is a beadle, which was a lowlevel functionary in the church at the time. Both Bumble's name and position allude to an insect.

Bolz said the role of Nancy gives her a chance to belt out loud songs, which is something she doesn't get to do often. So far, she said the responses have been mostly positive from those who saw it on its opening weekend.

"I think that students should definitely come see it," Bolz said. "I think it's a really good show.

Fagin (David Troup) sings "I Think I Better Think It Out Again" during the Manhattan Arts Center's Community Theatre's presentation of "Oliver!" The play opens Thursday night.

chance for students to relax before

said. Cinco de Mayo is a commemoration of Mexico's defeat of the French army in 1862. The holiday happens to be about the same time college students are getting liberated from school commitments, homework and winter weather. Organizers of the event said they hope celebrating the Mexican holiday and college culture at the same time will help change the Aggieville party and music culture, Trout said.

Ticket info

The Manhattan Arts

Center will present

"Oliver!" at 8 p.m.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday and 2 p.m.

Sunday. Tickets are $12 for general public, $8.50 for students and $5 for children. "Oliver!" also will be shown at 8 p.m.

"It seems like parties don't get going until about 11 anymore," Trout said. "We're trying to get students down to the 'Ville early.

Bands will start playing on the back patio at about 2 p.m. Blake Chaffin, senior in marketing, and Jeremy Hollembeak, senior in chemical engineering, both of Sharkey's Little Groove Box, will perform first under the name Blake and Jeremy. The other two bands set to play are both from Arkansas and frequently play at the University of Arkansas, as well as around the nation, Trout said. The band Ash will take the stage after Blake and Jeremy. Ash plays top 40-style music, with everything from songs by Shaggy to the Dave Matthews Band to reggae. Trout said the band is popular with college students and is a band that keeps the party going.

Ren Plummer, of Ash, said the band wants to play songs people are surprised and excited to hear so they'll want to keep listening.

'What we really want to do is just play what we enjoy," Plummer said. While Aggieville is lively, Plummer said he would like to see a bigger appreciation of live music there. "There's not a big music scene - a live music scene, and we're hoping to change that," Plummer said.

The third band to perform Friday night will be Tragically White. Trout said the group is a spring break-type band that plays all dance music. "It's just totally a college band." Trout said. "It's the same as being at Ladies and '80s night, almost," Trout said.

"We do '80s, '90s and then, new millennium dance stuff." Tragically White's Rick Martin said.

Martin said the group was voted the best cover band in Arkansas by readers of the Arkansas Free Press.

"We draw big crowds in this part of the country," he said.

Trout said he saw both Arkansas bands in Fayetteville, where they are popular, and expects them to go over well in Aggieville too. Tragically White is a big hit with women, Trout said.

"The ladies really like these guys," he said. "They're just a favorite with them.

Joe's will open at 11 a.m. Friday with burger specials. Trout said there also will be a King of the Wings wingeating contest, as well as the live radio remote with K-Rock. Plenty of giveaways will contribute to a festive atmosphere for students.

"We think it will be a good time before they go into finals next week," he said.

Bush commits U.S. to missile-defense system

By ROBERT BURNS The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. -President Bush on Tuesday committed the United States to building a defense against ballistic missile attack and indicated he would not allow a Cold War-era arms treaty to stand in the way.

"We need a new framework that allows us to build missile defenses to counter the different threats of today's world," Bush said.

The president's remarks marked the start of an intensified campaign to convince America's European and Asian allies — as well as Russia, China and others Hostile to the idea of missile defense - that attacks by ballistic missiles can best be deterred by defenses rather than large offenses.

"To maintain peace, protect our own citizens and our own allies and friends, we must seek security based on more than the grim premise that we can destroy those who seek to destroy us," he said. He said he was sending senior aides to allied capitals in Europe, Asia, Australia and Canada to discuss "our common responsibility to create a new framework for security and stability that reflects the world of today." The delegations will be headed by Richard Armitage, deputy secretary of state; Paul Wolfowitz, deputy secretary of defense; and Steve Hadley, a deputy national security adviser, Bush said.

"These will be real consultations. We are not presenting our friends and allies with unilateral decisions already made. We look forward to hearing their views, the views of our friends, and to take them into account."

Cost estimates for a missile defense have ranged from $30 billion to $200 billion, depending on its structure. Among the main criticisms of missile defense are its high cost and unknown effective-

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., was quick to question Bush's commitment to missile defense

"We fear the president may be buying a lemon here," Daschle said. "There has not been a shred of evidence that this works. We've got to ask some very tough questions.

Bush called the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty - which prohibits large-scale missile defenses - a relic of the Cold War.

"We must move beyond the constraints of the 30-year-old ABM treaty," the president said. "This treaty does not recognize the present or point us to the future. It enshrines the past.

Bush did not say the United States would withdraw from the treaty, but he focused much of his speech on what he views as its shortcomings.

Bush said the United States would move quickly to reduce its stockpile of nuclear weapons, although he mentioned no numbers.

In an indication that these reductions might be made unilaterally, Bush said the cuts would show the United States is ready to lead by example.

The United States now has about 7,200 nuclear weapons and is committed to cutting between 3,000 and 3,500 under the START II

Both the United States and Russia have indicated a willingness to drop even lower, to a range of 2,000 to 2,500 warheads, although that has not been settled in a formal treaty.

Without offering specifics, Bush said his administration would change "the size, the composition, the character of our nuclear forces" in ways that reflect the reality that the Cold War is over.

The administration believes deep reductions, whether taken unilaterally or as part of a formal agreement with Russia, would help convince Moscow that U.S. missile defense is not aimed at Russia or intended to give the United States, the world's remaining superpower, absolute military dominance.

A significant obstacle to deploying a large-scale missile defense is the strong support in Europe and Russia for the ABM

The Clinton administration tried unsuccessfully to get Russia. to agree to amend the treaty in ways that would permit national missile defenses.

Bush said the ABM treaty was written when the United States and the former Soviet Union were avowed enemies with thousands of nuclear weapons aimed at each

"We should leave behind the constraints of an ABM treaty that perpetuates a situation based on mistrust," he said.

'It prohibits us from exploring all options."

Just hours before his speech. Bush called Russian President Vladimir Putin to discuss disarmament and nuclear weapons. The White House quoted Bush as saying that Putin was very appreciative that Bush reached out to him. On Monday, Bush called several European leaders and NATO's chief.

As Bush's motorcade entered the university grounds at Fort McNair on the banks of the Potomac River, it passed a demonstration of about a dozen people holding a large yellow banner that said, "Stop Star Wars."

Bush did not say whether he would seek to amend the treaty.

Although he did not provide details on the kind of missile defense his administration will build, he indicated it likely would include not only land-based interceptors but also weapons based on . ships at sea.

He said these defenses are needed to deter not Russia or other established nuclear powers but rogue nations - states for whom terror and blackmail are a way of life.

He mentioned no countries by

Bush said the time has come to shift emphasis toward a defensive nuclear strategy - not just missile defenses but also coordinated efforts to stop the global spread of nuclear weapons technologies and away from the traditional U.S. strategy of deterring aggression by maintaining a large offensive nuclear capability.

Dorothy Farrand, psychologist with University Counseling Services, was at Mercy Health Center with Cobb the evening he died, and she said she was witness to many emotions of those present.

"I was at the hospital, and the main emotions of everyone there were grief and a tremendous outpouring of love and support," Farrand said. "It was great to be a part of that."

Farrand said she has seen many people affected by Cobb's death slowly getting on with their lives. She said a step to getting to that point is to deal with the grief one might feel rather than to deny and ignore it.

"You must acknowledge the emotions you experience in response to the loss and not hold onto any sense of guilt or responsibility."

Daniel Moon, freshman in secondary education, said he is working on handling day-to-day life. "I'm slowly getting there," Moon

Moon said it is easy to feel a sense of guilt for a loved one's death because often, friends and family feel they could have prevented the death. He said, however, that to feel guilty is

"There's nothing you can do now, so don't blame yourself," he said. "Just try to learn from this experience." Farrand said she agreed.

"I think students who have come in contact with these people had a lot of conflicting emotions," she said. "They wish they had known, and they wish they could've done something that might have changed the outcome."

Leonard Owens, Cobb's uncle, said

"The next time we get together as a family, there will be someone missing, and that will always keep his loss alive," Owens said.

Owens said his family is having a more difficult time moving on because no definite motive for his suicide has been discovered.

"We did not see this coming ,and therefore did not understand his actions," Owens said. "We strongly believe there are some unanswered questions."

Owens said he encourages those who are contemplating taking their own lives to look for hope, as well as to share their feelings with family.

"For all the young people out there who feel there is no other way out, there is always hope, and no matter how bad things seem, life is a precious gift, and the hurt they may feel never stays. Happiness will always prevail if they just hang onto the hope.

"And, as bad as they feel their situation is, they need to know that their loved ones will get over whatever it is and be there for them with support and unconditional love."

Moon said relationships, however, are what is most difficult about moving on. He said he simply wishes to make sure his friends aren't battling

"The hardest thing is relationships with different people," Moon said. "I want to make sure everyone else is feeling OK and to be there for as many people as I can."

Cobb was born May 15, 1981, in Denver. He graduated from Kent Denver school in 1999 and entered K-State in fall 1999. He was planning on becoming an architect.

Farrand said that above all, friends and loved ones of Wise and Cobb need to remember that while it is important to keep their memories alive, those closest to them also must continue with their own lives.

"You must realize that this person made a choice about their life," she said. "You must live life as fully as you can, and that means moving on. Moving on, however, does not mean forgetting."

Guy said that while on the job, she hasn't experienced anything bizarre or out of the ordinary. She said that occasionally people under the influence of alcohol are loud and sometimes have to be kicked out or warned to be quiet.

Guy said that in her profession, it is difficult to keep workers for an extended period of time. Usually, she said, people only work in house-keeping for an average of six months, but after eight years, Guy said she still loves her job.

"This job is very challenging, but I try to help," she said. "I have a good support system here."

"He gave a marvelous concession speech," Shaw said. "There was concern about the transition, but he made sure that it would be orderly and smooth."

While Zedillo's party was voted out, Shaw said he doesn't believe they were voting for the other candidate as much as they were voting for the different party and a change in the country.

As president for six years, Zedillo was an advocate for political reform and attempted to tackle corruption in the justice system. Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture Series, said in a press release that Zedillo's work toward democracy was one of the reasons he was invited to speak.

When he speaks, Zedillo will be the latest on a long list of world leaders to give a Landon Lecture, ranging from U.S. presidents Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan and George Bush, to those of Spanishspeaking nations, such as former Nicaraguan President Violetta Barrios de Chamorro.

Zedillo will deliver his speech in English. He has a doctoral degree in economics from Yale University as a world-renowned economist.

Zedillo also has been in the news recently as head of the U.N. Commission for Financing Development. He said in a published report posted on the New California Media Web site that despite its shortcomings, the liberalization of trade is the most efficient way of lifting humanity. He also is being considered as a Latin American candidate to succeed U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan.

Betty Horton firmly believes people are more passionate about their work if they've stared tragedy in the face.

And no matter how long or hard Horton works to provide suicide awareness as the director of the Jerome Horton Foundation in Topeka, she won't forget the harshness of suicide.

Horton watched as her son, Jerome, slipped into depression in 1997. She was there when he pushed himself away from loved ones.

And she answered the door when police officers told her that her 22-year-old University of Kansas student had shot himself in the head with a gun he had purchased at a pawn shop just weeks before.

"We saw him about a month and a half before, right around Memorial Day," she said. "He was pasty and light-skinned. He had no energy. We knew he was

For some, the possible school budget cuts might just be numbers on paper, but for teachers in the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school district, the cuts are about their

"I feel sad, really sad," said Karen Little, a first-grade teacher at Roosevelt Elementary School. "I fear that by reducing the number of teachers, we're going to reduce our quality of education."

Last week, Gov. Bill Graves sent a school finance bill to legislative conference that could lead to the district losing approximately $425,500. This, coupled with declining enrollment, has led the district to notify about 50 employees that their contracts might not be renewed next Kathy Keller, a special-education teacher at Roosevelt, said these cuts could be drastic.

"I think it's burting the morale of teachers," she said.

We have teachers who are excellent teachers who don't know if they'll be hired back." Barbara Clark, a fourth-grade teacher at Roosevelt, was one of the teachers notified she might not be hired back

"It's very disheartening that the school board decided to cut people rather than buildings," Clark said.

Clark also said the district "pink slipped" more teachers than they had to cut.

"It was recommended that they cut 10 by the district office, and they chose to cut more," Clark said. "That's just a slap in the face.

But Clark said these cuts have not come as a shock to

The district office and administration have been very up front with us," she said. "We've known for two or three months that this was a possibility, and we were prepared.'

Because of the uncertainty in the district, Clark said some teachers have decided to apply for jobs elsewhere. Those who remain, she said, are concerned about the quality of education the students will receive.

"It will affect student learning by having larger classrooms," Clark said. "It even affects the kids now because 50 teachers in the district don't know what they will do t looks like something out of a movie, said Tanya Krehbiel. sophomore in accounting, describing Pillsbury Crossing during her first visit there.

Perhaps that's because it was quite a scene with many people celebrating the start of spring by laying out on the rocks near the waterfall, throwing frisbees in the water or driving their trucks out onto the sheet of rock that lies in Deep Creek to relax and listen to music.

When the weather gets warmer, many K-State students take advantage of the recreational area just southeast of Manhattan that offers beautiful scenery, swimming and rope swings.

"I come out here a lot," Becky Davis, freshman in business, said. "It's addicting because it's so relaxing."

Davis, among others, was soaking in the sun and utilizing dead week to do nothing but relax.

"I like it because it's the closest

I can get to getting away from Manhattan for a while," Courtney Oswald, sophomore in advertising,

Most people said their favorite thing to do at Pillsbury Crossing is to lay out by the waterfall or plant their lounge chairs in the ankle deep water to cool off.

"I love to lay out on the roadway, plus it's a good stress reliever before finals," Beth Foss, freshman in elementary education, said.

Instead of escaping the thought of finals, some people brought their studies with them.

Lacie Hiebert, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, killed two birds with one stone. She laid out in the sun while she tackled some of her studying she needed to do for finals next week.

It's a good way to get out of the house," she said. "We came here all the time last year and during rush. It's girls' night out during the day."

Temporary lot to relieve parking problems; permanent solution on way

KAREN MIKOLS/Collegian

Cars scan the East Stadium lot for parking spaces while students walk to class. Parking continues to be a campus issue. A temporary lot, ready for students in the fall, is being constructed behind Lot B-12 behind Ford and Haymaker Halls.

Kansas State Collegian

In her first semester at K-State, Renee Bayard has figured out the university parking game.

Well, at least how she wants to play it. Bayard has a parking situation that revolves around her classes. She is able to park in the McCain Auditorium lot Monday, Wednesday and Friday and in the surrounding neighborhood Tuesday and Thursday, when she has class at

"I am an early-bird riser anyway, so it worked out well," she said.

This is just one of the many ways K-State students deal with fewer spaces than there are available on campus. However, other students struggle with parking when they cannot find a place to park and sometimes are forced to park off

"It can be kind of frustrating, but as long as I can find a spot, then no problem," Luke Thornton, junior in finance, said. "However, it gets a little aggravating when I cannot find a spot."

For students like Thornton, who sometimes parks in Aggieville, there is help on the way - both short and long term. A temporary parking lot is being built between Serum Plant Road and Jardine Drive.

It's what officials term a temporary lot. but as its construction begins, permanent plans are taking shape.

A parking garage - or perhaps more than one - could be in K-State's master plan for the future, and it's a possible solution to the university's parking

Jackie McClaskey, assistant to the dean of the College of Agriculture and chairwoman of the campus development committee, said the committee is working on a master plan that would include three different parking garages on and around

It is a plan that would encompass the next 25 to 50 years, and McClaskey said it is being revised.

"At this point, the committee is looking at the idea of putting parking garages in different areas," she said.

The plan calls for three such structures

"They would be small structures and not the one big structure," McClaskey said.

One garage would be in front of the K-State Student Union, another one north of the engineering building and another behind Justin Hall.

The plans are in the roughest of stages, and no set time frame has been established to implement such plans, McClaskey said. Still, they contain plans to meet future campus parking demands.

Student Body President Kyle Barker said parking is an issue that K-State is working to fix, but he said it is difficult to do in the short term.

"We are working to meet student concerns," he said. "But it is not something that's going to be fixed in a year, and K-State seems to be taking a long-term approach to it."

In addition to a master plan with possible parking garages, the temporary lot being constructed on campus between Serum Plant Road and Jardine Drive signals the latest temporary solution to K-State's parking problem.

A system that K-State director of Parking Services Darwin Abbott is constantly looking to improve upon, but his hands are somewhat tied, he said, as he only can do what the administration, students and faculty allow him to do.

His job, he said, is to make sure a plan to ease the parking situation on campus makes fiscal sense.

Now, Abbott said, there are a variety of other solutions to parking on campus that could be used along with the parking garages. They range from the option of doing nothing, to parking management to shuttle systems and to getting remote parkers access to campus. There was the possibility of a mass transit system in Manhattan and on K-State's campus, but that possibility seems to be off the table after the city of Manhattan failed to meet the 50,000 population mark that would have provided additional federal funding.

Abbott said. One other option for urbanized funding, Abbott said, is to be classified as an urbanized area. He said that is a process that still is a few years away. "If we are going to be classified as an urbanized area, it is probably going to take four or five years to get there." Abbott Editor in Chief

The Federal Communications Commission proposed a $7,000 fine against WZEE-FM, Madison, Wis., in January for violating its "indecency" regulations by playing the raw, unedited version of the Eminem song "The Real Slim Shady" during hours when children could be listening. Station personnel defended themselves by saying that they of course had cued up the milder, edited version of the song but that "static electricity" caused the station's CD player to skip that and jump right to the other version.

KSU Habitat for Humanity sets recycling challenge

An empty can probably means very little to the person who pitches it in their trash. However, for Habitat for Humanity, an empty can is money to build on.

Habitat for Humanity has had a partnership with Howie's Recycling for almost two years. Greg Wilson, owner of Howie's, said anyone who brings in aluminum cans can request that the money be donated to Habitat for Humanity

"It's not a bad deal," Wilson said. "Usually it's just a buck or two at a time, but that adds up when enough people get involved."

Habitat for Humanity is issuing a recycling challenge to try to get more people involved in the effort.

The group is challenging organizations and individuals in the community to recycle cans at Howie's Saturday through May 12. "Although we do the can drive all year long, we wanted to concentrate the effort to get more people involved and make it fun at the same time. said Elise Lambert, executive director of Habitat for Humanity.

Lambert said they will keep track of who donates the most during the week and they will get recognized with a certificate.

"People have already drank whatever was in the can," Lambert said. "They don't need it anymore, so why not take it to Howie's for us? We want to get more people aware of the project."

Use of Napster declines after copyright ruling

SAN FRANCISCO - Napster use has plunged 41 percent since the online company added songscreening technology to comply with a federal court order, according to an Internet researcher.

Users downloaded 1.6 billion songs in April, a sharp decline from 2.8 billion in February, according to Matt Bailey, an analyst with Cambridge, Mass.-based Webnoize.

"It is now very difficult to get to material that has been blocked by Napster," Bailey said Wednesday.

Napster's programming allows users to share and trade songs stored on computers linked by the Internet. The new screening technology was put in place during an ongoing legal dispute with the recording industry.

In February, there were 1.6 million people logged on to Napster at any given time. In April, there were just over 1 million - and they were trading a smaller selection of music, Bailey said.

Napster did not immediately return calls seeking comment.

The Recording Industry Association of America, which sued Redwood City-based Napster for copyright infringement, said the report does not prove the company is fulfilling its part of the judge's order to remove copyrighted works from its site.

Income of Kansas farms down from previous year

farmers saw their income plummet by 7.7 percent last year, with government money keeping many farms afloat, Kansas Farm Management Association said.

In its annual income report, the agency said the average net farm income of the 2.083 farms in its databank was $39,197 in 2000. That is a drop from the $42,488 net farm income of a year earlier.

Marty Albright, agricultural economist and KFMA administrator, said in a news release that dry growing conditions and rising energy prices were key contributors to the decline.

The 2000 income was down nearly 11 percent from the five-year average of $43,946.

The average farm would not have broken even had it not been for federal bailouts. The typical Kansas farm received $45,614 in government payments in 2000. That represents 116 percent of net farm income.

Writer strike temporarily averted: talks continue

LOS ANGELES - Contract talks between Hollywood screenwriters and producers and studio heads extended past a deadline Wednesday, temporarily averting a strike that would halt TV and movie production.

"We're working very hard to reach an agreement." Cheryl Rhoden, spokeswoman for the Writers Guild of America, said shortly after the contract expired at 12:01 a.m.

Rhoden said the contract had not been extended and declined to comment on how long the talks could continue.

"There's no way to tell," she said, Barbara Brogliatti, spokeswoman for the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers, joined Rhoden for the announcement.

Fears of a walkout have gripped the industry for months, but the

Barker looks to change rules of university dead week

By NANCY HULL

Kansas State Collegian

Final exams are basically the only thing instructors cannot give during dead week. Projects, papers and assignments all can be due this week.

The week exists as a time for students to catch up on classes and prepare for finals, but Student Body President Kyle Barker plans on trying to change professors' policies.

He said his main concern is that no new information is presented in class during dead week.

"New information isn't helping students. It's hindering the ability to prepare for finals," Barker said. Assignments that art, engineering and architecture students have this week do not concern Barker, he said, because the work prepares them for finals.

"It's a week period needed to prepare for finals week," he said.

Barker is taking examples of problems students are having with dead week and plans on compiling a report. He said he plans on lobbying Faculty Senate to make changes.

However, Faculty Senate President Mickey Ransom said he thinks the elimination of new information this week would cause faculty difficulties.

"That would shorten the semester by one week." Ransom said. "Students would actually be shortchanged by the loss of one week of information."

Ransom said he understands the concern of students being overwhelmed by projects and papers this week.

"I think it would be better if faculty didn't require final projects or reports this week," he said.

If students think an instructor is violating the policy, they should complain to the provost or dean of the college to have things changed.

"The purpose of dead week is to provide a relatively quiet time to prepare for students' final exams," Ransom said.

Sara Drake, however, said she's been so busy trying to complete projects that she hasn't had time to start thinking about finals.

"It's just been like an extra week of school. It's not been like 'Let's review.' It's been 'let's keep going,'" Drake, senior elementary education, said.

Ransom said students have known for quite some time that some assignments are due this week.

"Students might need to do a better job of setting priorities and scheduling and not setting things off," he said. "I can see why they get caught."

Drake said since she also has projects due next week, it would have been nice to have this week to work on completing assignments,

FACULTY HANDBOOK SECTION F70

Except for honors, problems, seminar, reports, research, laboratory practical, language, studio and fine arts performances, and these courses, the last examination (last unit or comprehensive test) in a course must be given during the examination period specified by the Joint Committee on Academic Policy and Procedures and which is published in the class schedule. Once the final examination time for a course is published in the class schedule, it may be changed only with the concurrence of the Joint Committee on university provost, president of faculty senate, and president of the student body. No examinations other than those listed above may be given during the last five calendar days before final examinations. Classes may have takehome examinations, projects, papers, or other media in lieu of written final examinations as the last evaluation instrument in the class. In such instances, a deadline for submittal of the medium may not be earlier than the time of the end of the scheduled examination period for the course published in the class schedule.

Beta, KD wash cars to benefit charity

Members of Beta Theta Pi and Kappa Delta collected buckets, sponges and water hoses to help those in need — one car at a time.

The two greek organizations organized a car wash for two hours yesterday afternoon. The donations received will be sent to World Vision.

Ryan Rochel, freshman in mechanical engineering, said World Vision is an organization that provides food and medicine to people in need.

"It's a great cause," Rochel said. "We just want to do as much to help the effort out as possible."

Jared Jaynes, sophomore in biology, said not many people do car washes as fund-raisers, so they thought it would have a good turnout.

"We wanted to help raise some money for a good cause," Jaynes said. "Something like this lets us do that, have fun and meet people from another house. It's just an all-around good idea."

Along with the car wash, the two greek organizations are Rochel said the money they for ways to help them stay cool."

John Merritt, director of social services, said he expects the need for fans to increase this summer.

"We anticipate more of a demand because of the KPL crisis," Merritt said. "A lot of people just can't afford to pay those high rates. The fans will be available to anyone who doesn't have the funds at the time, Leupold said.

"Those in need can call our office or just stop in," she said. "As long as they can show us some how

Donations of working fans or money will be accepted, Merritt

"If the contributor chooses money, we will go buy the fans with that."

Merritt said the Salvation Army will take donations anytime throughout the summer.

"If we meet our demand and still are receiving fans, we will just store them for next summer," he said. "However, it is more likely there will always be someone in need of that little extra help."

The Collegian welcomes your letters to the editor. They can be submitted by e-mail to letters@spub.ksu.edu, or in person to Kedzie 116. Please include your full name, year in school and major. Letters will be edited for length and clarity.

The Collegian's Campus Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on topics relevant to the publication.

On the Topic

What do you plan on doing after your last

After my last final I am going to cut my hair into a mullet.

I'm going to pack up all those textbooks I couldn't sell back because of that new edition coming out, my uneaten ramen noodles that have been living in my room since September and my pet cockroach that I met here in the dorms and move back to home where it is air conditioned and they have hot showers. Hmmm.

When I finish with my finals I am going to Disneyworld.

Off the Topic

I would like to thank the Collegian for the encouraging article on suicide. That will make finals just so much smoother.

I don't see why Varney's even offers to buy books back considering they usually only want to buy back half of what I have and then that half they will only get me about a $1.50 a piece for. It's insulting.

I would like to know how many parking permits were sold per parking space 10 years ago as opposed to now

I just wanted to say thanks to the Collegian again, K-State hosted a successful international competition for the third year and we got second-page coverage, two days late and the scores were wrong. Way to go, Collegian.

Here is to the guy who lives next door. Pet penguins. It's illegal. Trust me.

This is to the chick next to me on the machines at the Rec. Are you so insecure with yourself that you needed to call two of your friends on your cell phone while working out? Because all I could do was feel sorry for you, because you have no idea how stupid you looked.

If you don't have the patience while you are in your car to stop at the crosswalks, don't drive on campus.

Micah Hawkinson is a sophomore. A sophomore. I am sure he knows a lot about getting a job in the real world.

I would just like to say that it is extremely inconsiderate of the Collegian to. during dead week, print a banner story about two of K-States greatest losses this year. Students have enough academic stress this week. We shouldn't have to struggle with the additional emotional stress that we are trying so hard to recover from.

Can someone explain to me how your employer not wanting to pay for your sex change operation is discrimination? I would really like to know if anyone has an answer.

Quit crying, G.1. Joe. Whose tax dollars are paying for your education?

Why is everyone going to class all of the sudden? Is there something I am missing?

I would also like to say that I think Michael Noll did a wonderful job on the article in Tuesday's paper about Coach Forbes of the baseball team. And I would like to say to Coach Forbes - great attitude, keep up the positiveness.

Sweeps week, Pepsi's solving of budget crunch among week's missed items

Someone forgot the "r" in "Dread Week." So you're blazing about campus, faster and nuttier than a squirrel who spent the night swimming in an espresso machine. Your instructors are all wearing sunglasses and ear pieces and talking to you in that Agent Smith monotone of moral disapproval ("You forgot your bibliography, Missster Anderson..."). When you jump to grab a book off the top shelves of the library, you pause in midair and your perspective spins 180 degrees. Yep, it's just like "The Matrix," but with less popcorn. And nobody's dressing like Trinity in this heat unless they're aiming for asphyxiation. Dammit.

So odds are you don't have time to keep pace with recent headlines. Odds are some snippets of breaking news might've slipped under your radar with the frenzy of finals and the joy of "Invader Zim" on Nickelodeon. But I got'cher back. Here's the news you missed between eyeblinks this week...

DRIVER AWARDED FOR DEDICA-TION TO TELEPHONE

An unnamed Johnson County driver earned a International Medal of Impenetrability yesterday for clinging to her cell phone while making a right-hand turn on a red light into oncoming traffic. "We applaud her adherence to personal conversation in the face of public safety, rationality and common sense." Kofi Annan, United Nations Secretary-General said in a statement from Geneva. Press releases from Qualcomm, Nokia and Ericsson also congratulated the driver, as did one from State Farm Insurance.

The driver was too busy for comment.

K-STATE BUDGET CRUNCH FOILED, THANKS TO PEPSI-COLA

A recent donation from Pepsi-Cola has alleviated any worries K-State administrators had after state budget cuts, but the donation also means an enhanced curriculum.

"We are the first school in the nation which offers a doctorate in Pepsi," President Jon Wefald announced at a Monday news conference. "We also have three new undergraduate programs: Mountain Dew, Mug Root Beer and Sierra Mist."

However, it will take students several years to navigate the degree tracks. Several prerequisites are spread through a variety of academic disciplines, including Pepsi 100 ("Pepsi/Coke: The Pepsi Challenge for Beginners"), General Engineering 204 ("Straws: Why Cylinders Work Best"), Math 255 ("Geometry of the Pepsi Cube"), Chemistry 321 ("Sierra Mist vs. watered-down Sprite: An Analysis") and English 502 ("Bottle Cap Poetry: Sorry, Play Again")

Wefald proudly displayed the new Pepsi logo tattoo on his ankle. "Don't laugh," he chided reporters, "all students, faculty and staff have to get one now. We just get to pick where."

K-STATE BECOMING MORE INTERACTIVE TO INCREASE STUDENT INTEREST

A number of changes are being made to preexisting K-State classes to make them more attention-getting. According to a press release, the university has taken the nod from popular television media advisers to jump-start the awareness of tired or disinterested students. Finals week has been replaced with sweeps week, and much class content has a more media-savvy bent.

Creative writing classes will now start at maximum enrollment, but one student will be dropped from the roll every week following a class vote (recommended parting phrases: "The workshop has spoken" or "You are the weakest poet — goodbye"). Similarly, the College of Architecture has added a new class, "Who Wants to be an Architect?" (Often heard in Seaton Hall: "Would you like to call your adviser or your lab partner? Is that your final

Calculus I will now be followed by X-Treme Calculus, which has much the same content as Calculus II, but with fewer clothes, more obnoxious instructors and cameras flitting about the room on wires. The failure rate for one semester is expected to be catastrophic.

An attempt to integrate elements of MTV's "Jackass" into the K-State environment were thwarted when media advisers drove across campus. Due to the behavior of pedestrians and motorists alike, working in "lackass" would just be redundant, they decided.

JUSTICE LEAGUE OF MANHATTAN FORMED; HALL OF JUSTICE SITE SOUGHT

A Wednesday press conference unveiled K-State's elite superheroic protectors, the Justice League of Manhattan. "We will defend this city and university from all evil," announced JLM spokeswoman Nicole "Wonder Woman" Oldhe.

Alongside Jon "Superman" McGraw, Amy "The Flash" Mortimer, Travis "Green Lantern" Reynolds and Jeff "Aquaman" Tignor, Oldhe unveiled plans for a Hall of Justice, site of construction to be determined. Locations mentioned were north of KSU Stadium, the top of KS Hill or "that patch out by Wal-Mart," according to a press

"No place on campus," Mortimer insisted, "because we'll need parking spots SOOT."

The newly-formed super-team called on the community to assist in its initial days.

"We're looking for some decent costumes, some gadgets and more members," McGraw announced, "as we'll need all the heroism we can muster to foil the nefarious plans of the Wamego Legion of Doom."

At press time, the Warnego Legion of Doom consisted of a man named Mitch and a tractor, but Wefald insisted K-State still needed the protection of the ILM.

"I sleep very well knowing we're under their protection," Wefald said, gently patting the Powercatsignal at his desk.

Panic in the face of finals? Hell with that. In the face of certain doom, failure, graduation or other life-altering experiences, give it a laugh. Sometimes, that's all it's

Equality marks feminism's core definition

One of my friends calls me a femi-nazi. It's true, I am a feminist. However, I don't think a lot of people realize there can be different ideas associated with this. Just because I am a feminist doesn't mean I have a mullet hairstyle ... but if Joe Dirt can pull it off there is always a possi-

It doesn't mean I burn my bras, because as Dolly Parton once said, "I wanted to be first woman to burn my bra, but it would have taken the fire department four days to put it out."

Being a feminist doesn't automatically mean that I am in favor of things such as affirmative action, because I am not. I want a job because I am a qualified, intelligent person - not due to my gender.

Feminism, to me, is about equality. Yet I am happy that some things are not equal. For instance, I pay less for my car insurance because I am a woman. There are generally more bathroom stalls for me to use because I am a woman.

Being a feminist does not hinder, but instead helps to enable me to appreciate the human body. I love wearing form fitting clothing when I go out and I find it admirable when other women, within reason, do it as well. A woman's body is beautiful and it should be displayed in classy, yet sexy ways. However, there is also the same realization of beauty that exists when sweats are worn, when a conversation involving politics or literature is discussed, basically when the beauty of a woman is continuous, from her body, to her mind, to her soul, to her aura,

It might be hard for some people to believe, but a feminist can have a sense of humor as well.

I complain about woman drivers.

I think some women use the PMS excuse too much. Granted things happen to a woman's body on a monthly basis, but that does not justify biting someone's head off. screaming at the top of one's lungs or sharpening the kitchen utensils while making threats to those around her.

I make fun of the fact that most women can not go to the bathroom alone, but instead in packs of comfort called friends.

BECKY WILSON / Collegian

When a man makes a sexist comment, I usually have a sarcastic reply saying that women should never have been allowed to vote, work outside of the home, have a decision about birth control and so on.

> And then there is the famous college joke about women only attending a university to obtain their MRS degree. Isn't that still true? These books and intellectual conversations are giving some women the notion that there are other reasons besides finding a significant other to attend college. What on earth is this world coming to?

As a feminist I can march in a rally encouraging woman's rights one night and find it impressive when a man takes me out and treats me like a lady the next. I can open doors, but I am not against someone opening them for me.

When I have a family, I hope I can afford to stay home and raise my children until they go to school. My family will always be more important than my career. Yet I find it admirable for a women who continues to work outside of the home. Society places guilt on either choice, without realizing that no woman can be Wonder Woman.

There are things that bother me. It is also a shame that women still make around 25 percent less than the average man. It is hard to deal with issues such as domestic violence that is basically being ignored by our society. These things must come to an

Being a feminist means different things to everyone. To some it just means having a Rosie the Riveter poster hanging in their room, to others it means demanding equal rights and for others it is the goal of destroying what they consider to be a patriarchal dominated society.

As Rebecca West put it, "People call me a feminist whenever I express sentiments that differentiate me from a doormat or a prostitute."

Men should have right to march with women

I decided to attend the "Take Back the Night" march on Friday because I thought it would be a peaceful demonstration against violence on women in our society. However, what I discovered was nothing like I had so naively hoped.

My vision was of a peaceful march to draw attention to the number of women who have been victims of violence. What I saw was a highly verbal and, what I considered to be, a very negative environment polluted by obscene chants and female supremacist attitudes. I saw many women marching with their young children. It was disturbing to see these women teaching their children that the best way to deal with violence is by walking through the streets yelling obscenities.

Also, I do not feel that men who want to support this cause should be left to stand on the sidelines watching. If these women want the support of men they should treat them with respect and include them in the march. The woman is not the only person victimized by this violence. Her family, friends and future partner are also

I want to conclude by stating that men are not the enemy. We cannot end hate and sexism by becoming hateful and sexist.

Marching alone vital for women to gain respect

Editor,

I'm a male social work student, who a week before the "Take Back The Night" march wrote the Ordinary Women a somewhat confused and angry letter over why I, as a male, couldn't march.

I couldn't understand why they would turn down anyone that wanted to show support, even if they were a male. I felt that the decision to exclude us from the march was a step backwards, and I told them so. The responses I received from women sharing their personal feelings or stories of abuse helped me see a side I had never considered.

I never once considered the betrayal that they must of felt when it came to being physically or sexually abused, especially by a man that they thought they could trust. Men that had told them that they would be there for them and that they could be trusted, just as I had suggested about myself in my letter. Until those women wrote to me, or spoke to me, I had no idea of the depth of their burt

All of these women are looking for a way to be empowered again.

They want to feel safe, they want to feel equal and most importantly, they want to be able to trust again. I now see that, for the purposes of the march, I represent the abuse. Abuse being the one obstacle to achieving those feelings of safety, equality and trust ever again. Sadly, I also represent the feelings of betrayal. Regardless of how good my intentions.

After coming to this realization, I chose to show my support in the way that the group requested and that was from the sidelines. I'm so glad that I did. The highlight of the march for me was watching my wife and daughter march hand in hand with wonderful women who showed incredible courage just being there.

I will be there next year in full support. After what these women have been through, their request is rather simple. However, the affects are very powerful. For that two miles, let them stand and march alone.

Young Democrats discuss farm issues

By QUINN ASPEGREN Kansas State Collegian

K-State's Young Democrats are seeking to make a difference in the Democratic national platform by introducing an agriculture resolu-

Even though he says it may only be a small victory for local family farmers, Nicholas Bowser proved that an agricultural based resolution belongs in the Democratic National platform for years to

"There are obviously more issues that need to be addressed, particularly dealing with small farms, and that is why I drafted the resolution and presented it at this year's state convention in Topeka," said Bowser, head of the platform policy committee and sophomore in agronomy.

Phi Stevenson, president of the Kansas Young Democrats organization and recent graduate in political science from the University of Kansas, said he is very glad that Bowser decided to raise these issues at the state convention.

"Nick brings a great deal of experience and knowledge of agricultural issues that many of the members simply don't have." Stevenson said.

Bowser, who grew up on a farm near Holton, Kan., realizes and understands the importance of making sure that large corporations do not take over the entire farming industry in America.

His resolution addressed the issues of prices in the markets, agriculture zoning, corporate hog farming and the continued consolidation of agricultural marketing and processing companies.

By writing the resolution in accordance to these four specific areas. Bowser said it should be easier to incorporate them into the Democratic national platform.

"The first point deals with developing the markets for traditional ag commodities and the development of new and special crops," Bowser said.

"The second point talks about ag zoning, which is land bought and divided for development. The resolution proposes that land may not be purchased in pieces smaller than 40 acres, and it must be bought adjacent to already existing residential areas and cities."

The fourth point, prompted by the prospective merge between Tyson Foods Inc. and IBP, suggests there is too much consolidation among farmers in the industry, and this leads to limited competition.

"Merging and consolidation threatens markets for small farms," Bowser said.

Stevenson believes the resolution touches on environmental and economic issues that have been very important to the Democrats not only in Kansas - but on the national level.

Bowser's proposal addresses the environmental impact that large, corporate hog facilities have upon the environment. Corporate operations pose a threat to clean water and the environment.

"In approving the resolution. we are making the statement that we must have stricter guidelines to protect our streams and drinking water aquifers," Stevenson said

Secondly, it addresses the effect these corporate entities have upon Kansas family farms.

"Kansas is a state that has been built by the hard work of independent farmers." Stevenson said. "Accordingly, we support the family farm and support policies that help the family farmer to support his or ber family financially

By utilizing what he learned growing up on his father's farm. and now farming acreage of his own while attending K-State, Bowser wants to make a difference in sustaining rural America by sending his proposal to Washington, D.C.

He said he hopes that discussion and measure will be taken at the national level by sometime next year.

White House, Congress reach tax-cut deal

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - White House officials and congressional Republican leaders struck a budget deal Wednesday that would deliver on President Bush's goals of cutting taxes and limiting the growth of spending, though by less than he wanted.

The pact - brokered after weeks of bargaining - would cut taxes by $1.35 trillion over the next 11 years. less than the $1.6 trillion, 10-year tax cut Bush has made the focus of his economic plan. Even so, it would be one of the deepest tax cuts ever.

The agreement would also let spending for many programs grow next year by 5 percent - higher than the 4 percent Bush had long said was sufficient.

In both cases, Bush and GOP leaders had to bow to demands from moderate Republicans and Democrats for smaller tax cuts and more spending.

"The agreement is the largest rax cut in a generation and reasonable levels of spending," Bush told reporters as he met at the White House with GOP leaders and a handful of moderate congressional Democrats who are supporting

House and Senate leaders were planning to push a budget for 2002 reflecting the tax and spending agreement through Congress on

In a nod to the Democratic moderates who signed onto the agreement. Bush said the pact "could not have been done without the cooperation and work of some of our Democratic friends.

Those Democrats were empowered because two moderate GOP senators - James Jeffords of Vermont and Lincoln Chafee of Rhode Island - refused to vote for Bush's higher tax-cut proposal. That was all that was needed in the Senate, which is divided 50-50 between the two parties.

Some of the moderates were with Bush and GOP leaders at the White House for the announcement of the pact. They included Sen. John Breaux, D-La., Sen. Zell Miller, D-Ga., and Rep. Gary Condit, D-Calif.

Bush had made a $1.6 trillion, 10-year tax cut the cornerstone of his economic plan since early in his campaign for the GOP presidential nomination in 1999.

But facing resistance from moderates of both parties in the evenly divided Senate, he took the best deal he could get: $1,25 trillion in tax cuts from 2002 through 2011, plus $100 billion more in 2001 and 2002 aimed at sparking the economy.

Republicans also agreed that spending next year for education. defense and many other annually approved programs would grow to $667 billion, 5 percent more than this year's $635 billion. Bush had proposed a 4 percent increase to $661 billion, arguing that spending boosts need to be restrained, but the figure grew under pressure from the Senate.

The increase would cover the one-third of the federal budget that encompasses everything the government does except automatically paid benefits such as Social Security.

Get runners in scoring position,

K-State scored five runs on seven hits for the game, but the 10 men left on base proved to be the difference in the contest, Clark said.

In fact, with the Cats down 6-5 in the top of the eighth, Ty Soto came on to pinch hit with runners at first and second base. The freshman laced a hard hit to the left side, but it found the glove of third baseman Don Rogers, who then turned a 5-4-3 double play to end the inning.

"We had the game right in position, and we hit that ball right on the nose into a double play," Clark said. "Ty knocked the cover off of it right at the third baseman. If it's two feet on either side of him, we score two - maybe three - runs on the deal. But we put ourselves in a position to score runs. We just left a few too many on base."

Cat reliever James Brazeal (1-4) picked up the loss for the purple. Entering the game in the seventh inning with the score knotted at five, Brazeal gave up a two-out RBI single to Brian Burgamy, scoring Dustin Hawkins from second base.

"It's real tough," Brazeal said. "You just want to go out there and try to give the ball club a chance to come back and win. I mean, you've got a tied ball game. But a couple ground balls, things like that, just didn't go my way."

3 riders prepare for nationals in Georgia

Gratny, along with sophomore Maureen Reynolds and senior Kristy Rue, qualified for the national tournament, which will begin today in Conyers, Ga. Last year, however, Gratny, representing the K-State

The three women qualified for the tournament by their stand-out performances at Zone Championships in Fort Collins, Colo., on March 24. Rue was the only Wildcat to compete in two events at Zone competition. She placed first in Novice Fences to go on to the tournament.

Reynolds placed second in Intermediate Horses to advance in that event. Gratny won the Open division for Western Horsemanship, which is the same event she competed in last year at nationals.

Head Coach Teresa Slough said that heading to nationals is an huge accomplishment in itself, but the fact that the three women have accumulated enough points in one year makes the trip that more impressive.

"Points carry over year after year and in only one year of competition they were able to qualify for regionals," Slough said. "I am very proud of the girls. All three of them have really taken a leadership role on this team. They certainly make my job easier."

Gratny said her experience at last year's competition erases some of the uncertainty going into the show this weekend.

"Last year. I had to no clue what to expect or what was going to happen," she said. "This year I think I am a little more prepared and have an idea. The nerves are still high, though. Last year, there was nervousness of not knowing what to expect. I may not have that, but I am putting more pressure on myself to do that well

Slough described Gratny as the veteran of the team. The Leavenworth, Kan., native has been showing horses since she was 6. Both her parents showed horses competitively and her father, Mark Gratny, trains horses for a living. Gratny said her parents paved the way for her "My parents have been there from the beginning helping me," she said. "It is a wonderful opportunity to have that support at home. And they continue to come to the shows and support me.'

Even though Gratny has a second opportunity to take first at nationals this year, she said horse riding has a lot to do with chance. She isn't planning on anything

"Horse riding is a real humbling experience because at least half of your performance is based on a 1,200-pound animal that you don't know at all," she said. "What horse you draw definitely helps. Hopefully I will have a great horse, a great ride, it will be a great day and it will work out. But you can't plan on much."

Rue, unlike Gratny, didn't have the high expectations for herself coming into the season. The senior hadn't even planned on going out for equestrian until her mother convinced her to do so.

"My mom said that this was something she prayed about all summer and felt very strongly that I should do. And it has turned out great," she said. "This has been everything and more. It is probably the best college experience I have had. "

Rue, who is known to play the harmonica for the team before shows, said she surprised herself with how much she has accomplished this year. Although she started riding horses at a young age, her focus was more on cross country riding and fox-hunting than showing horses.

"The whole season I didn't know how I would do because everything is so different than what I have done," she said. "I didn't think I would place higher than sixth in any of my classes starting off. When I went and showed at my very first class in Novice Flats at Oklahoma, I won the class. So I decided I needed to adjust my goals.

Finals week rivalry heats up as battle begins

Starting Monday, the biggest competition of the year will take place - Michael Noll versus his

The rivalry began four semesters ago, when as a freshman, Noll and finals week faced off for the first time. The decision went to Noll. Since then, though, the finals have vowed vengeance, and after four months of preparation this semester, the finals believe they have their best chance ever to take Noll admitted that the competition will be tough, but he plans on being ready.

"It's gonna be a war," Noll said. "I'm going to go out there and play my game. If I play my game, and the finals play their game, I win. That's just being truthful, and the finals know that."

The biggest advantage the finals believe they have over Noll is endurance. They have been preparing lengthy essays designed to pack the entire hour-and-50-minute test period. Noll, on the other hand, isn't worried.

"It's going to be a battle, but I just have to go hard the entire 110 minutes," he said. "I've got to give 110 percent, leave it all in the room and go the whole 110 minutes." In the past, Noll has suffered from several injuries, including a broken wrist, which could hamper his ability to compete with the finals. Most recently, Noll was seen on campus with a cast on his index finger, but he refused to comment on whether he is healthy.

"I prefer to keep those kinds of things within the program," Noll said.

One interesting aspect of the finals/Noll matchup is what each has learned from past encounters. Each has seen what the other can do, and Noll has the advantage of looking at test files, but he isn't letting on to his game

"I don't think that would be appropriate for me to respond in regards to what our game plan is MICHAEL NOLL going to be," Noll said. "I've seen everything that everybody has done against finals, and the finals have seen everything that tests have done against me, but I'm not going to tell you this is what I'm going to do - borrow from this, borrow from that, or not borrow from this, not borrow from that - that just wouldn't be appropriate."

While Noll has shown the ability to perform well under pressure on tests, he doesn't take the credit for himself.

"I'm just one man," Noll said. "Without my friends helping me and pushing me, we might as well not even be talking here today. They deserve all the credit."

If Noll doesn't perform, however, he could be replaced at the top of the class by fellow K-State student Ben C.H. Player. Despite the obvious internal competition, though, Noll said that relations between the two students are friendly.

"Well, actually, I can't stand the guy ... I mean, my tutor told me to say that there's no rivalry between us," he said.

"We're just trying to push each other to be our best. Even though he will take my spot and receive all the glory if I do poorly, we're best friends out of the classroom. In fact, I even let him kiss my girlfriend and use my toothbrush. We're tight like that - no rivalry.

Rivalry or not, Noll will have to step up his game to take the top position. Making that task more difficult is the fact that several areas of the sophomore's game have dropped this semester. Lack of sleep due to late nights has taken its toll on the Collegian Sports Editor. Noll cited long study hours, but sources have indicated other-

When asked about his nocturnal activities, Noll had this to say:

"That's bull"," he said. "Who are your sources? They're going to be sleeping with the fishes in Tuttle Creek if I catch them.

Despite his outburst, though, Noll promised that academic fans will see only good sportsman-

"I let my grades do the talking," Noll said. The battle begins Monday. The winner will advance to next semester.

Athletes chosen for awards

By MICHAEL NOLL

Kansas State Collegian

Four track and field athletes have been named the coaches' Athletes of the week for their performances at the UMKC Invitational and the Drake Relays last weekend.

Korene Hinds, Austra Skujyte, Adam Walker and Dustin McDonald were all honored, head coach Cliff Rovelto announced Tuesday.

Hinds finished second in the 800 meters at the Drake Relays with a time of 2:06.49 and anchored the winning distance medley relay team that ran a season-best 11:09.34.

"Korene displayed a lot of heart and good race smarts in winning the 800 meters over some very good post-collegiate opponents," distance coach Randy Cole said. "Her anchor on the DMR solidified great efforts by all four relay members.

Skujyte won the long jump at UMKC with a team season-best of 199,75 and finished second in the 100-meter hurdles in 14.94 and seventh in the 200 meters with a season-best 11:09.34.

"Austra continues to work hard and is making very good progress,"

Royelto said. "She is rounding into very good shape and will be very important in our team's pursuit of a conference outdoor title."

Walker, who makes his first appearance on the list, earned a career-high 175-7 in the hammer to finish second at UMKC. "Adam really had a breakthrough this weekend," throws coach Steve Fritz said. "This moves him from hoping to make the final at conference to having a chance to score pretty well."

McDonald ran a leg on the 4x400-meter relay team that posted a season-best time of 3:09,59 at Drake. He also ran the 400-meter leg for the distance medley relay team that finished 15th in a time of 10:05.34, and his split of 46.8'in the 4x400-meter relay was a personal season best.

"Dustin ran a very aggressive leg on our 4x400-meter relay and, in doing so, demonstrated in a race the kind of speed that we have seen from him in practice all year," sprint/hurdle coach Ron Grigg said.

K-State will compete at the Nebraska Quadrangular with the Cornhuskers, Kansas and Wyoming on May 5.

they're in limbo."

Mary Stamey, principal of both Roosevelt and Eugene Field Elementary Schools, said she was saddened by the cuts.

"It doesn't hurt me - it hurts the children," she said. "Larger class sizes mean fewer teachers and less resources."

Pam Griffay, a second-grade teacher at Roosevelt said she was sad to see the budget cuts, because in the last few years they had been working toward smaller classroom sizes. She said smaller class sizes are the best way for students to learn.

"I think we have some quality teachers, and it's really sad when they have to cut teachers," Griffay said. "I understand budget cuts, but I hope, and they say, we'll keep our smaller class sizes."

Waiting for the Legislature to decide on budget cuts is hurting the schools, Stamey said.

"It stops you in your tracks, and you can't plan," she said. "At this time of year, we should be staffing, but we're stopped until we know how much money we have."

While there are many teachers at Roosevelt elementary that haven't been pink slipped, they still know the cuts can affect them.

"I'm sure I will be affected because we'll have less adults to work with our children," Little said. "There will be less one-onone time with those who especially need it. And, it scares me because I love our children, and I want what's best for them. and cuts aren't what's best Lina Guebert, a first-grade teacher at Roosevelt, said these cuts could affect class size.

"If we have to go to combination classes, it could be any one of us asked to teach them," she said.

Keller said it would be hard to tell how cuts might affect her because she is a special education

"It could affect me with more duties and higher caseloads of students, but that's yet to be seen,"

As the teachers in USD 383 prepare for summer, the thoughts of budget cuts darken their plans of an enjoyable vacation. But, for most of them, the main focus is on how the children's education will be affected.

"The bottom line is that kids are going to lose out on teacher time," Keller said.

Policy-makers focus on suicide

By ANJETTA McQUEEN

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C .- The government has mapped a plan aimed at preventing suicides by encouraging the troubled to seek help and making sure treatments and medicines are there when they do.

"There are few who escape being touched by the tragedy of suicide in their lifetimes," said Surgeon General David Satcher, who released the plan Wednesday.

Suicide is the eighth leading cause of death in the United States, killing 30,000 people each year. More than 650,000 people make the attempt.

The surgeon general's plan presents a wide range of strategies, including creating a uniform way that hospitals and police can report suicide deaths and injuries.

Some policy-makers want to focus on getting help to the troubled long before they consider taking their lives.

Many Americans who suffer mental illnesses simply don't have enough health insurance coverage to get needed treatment, said Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete Domenici, R-N.M.

Domenici is trying to expand laws that force insurance companies to offer the same level of coverage for mental health as they do for physical conditions

"The attitude has been, 'We don't understand it, so let's don't cover it." Domenici said Wednesday. "Mental illness is not just a name," he said. "It is really a serious Satcher is credited with being the first surgeon general to focus on suicide and mental health in general. The plan, promised in 1998 after a national suicide prevention conference, was debated by experts who compiled some 80 recommendations. Pared down to 68, the goals are set for 2005 and would be voluntary on the part of states, local agencies and anyone else who wanted to follow them, officials said.

The report points out the success of existing suicide-prevention programs. The Air Force reduced suicides by 60 percent in five years. for instance.

An important recommendation in the report urges the creation of a national violent death reporting system that includes suicide; only 17 states require hospitals to use a special code for suicide and attempts.

officials said. Often coroners, doctors and health officials rule suicides as something else to spare a family embarrassment and pain, they said.

The report also asks the help of churches and community centers in spreading the word that suicidal thoughts and actions are signs of illness and nothing to be ashamed of.

Bush outlines vision for defense system

By ROBERT BURNS

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Bush administration is considering a missile defense system that might be rushed into operation as early as 2004, possibly relying on weapons aboard ships or planes as well as on land. Critics call it a stopgap approach, a "scarecrow" defense based on a bluff.

President Bush said in outlining his vision of a new U.S. security strategy that anti-missile weapons based at sea or in the air could provide limited but effective defenses. He gave no timetable but said that when ready, missile defenses would be deployed.

TONGE

The Clinton administration focused its missile defense efforts on a Donald H. Rumsfeld has identified land-based system of 100 interceptors that would be based in Alaska and guided by a long-range radar stationed in the Aleutian Islands. It intended to wait until the system was proven effective before deploying it. After an intercept test failure last July, then-President Clinton announced that the technology was not ready. The Bush administration. however, has made clear it is considering a multifaceted approach. including an airborne laser weapon that would destroy a missile shortly after it lifted off, as well as sea-based missiles that might share with a landbased system the task of shooting down missiles in mid-flight.

Bush said Defense Secretary "near-term options" that could allow the United States to deploy against limited missile attacks.

Pentagon officials speaking on condition of anonymity said advisers to Rumsfeld are exploring the prospect of having at least a partial defense ready for use by the end of Bush's term, although it is believed that a working and fully tested defense is a decade or more away.

Jan Lodal, a former senior Pentagon official who favors missile defense, said Wednesday he hopes Bush does not accept the notion that a partial defense - or a bluff, in Lodal's words - will enhance security.

Although Rue had to readjust her personal goals, she was the one who brought the equestrian team together to create team goals and objectives.

Slough said a win at nationals for Rue would really mean a lot of the rest of the team. Reynolds agreed.

"Kristy really took charge and she got things started. She wanted to set the standard for the team," Reynolds said.

"Since it is equestrian's first year here, she wanted to everyone to know what this team is to be about in terms of team involvement, friendships and support. I think everything we set has really been fulfilled this year."

Things seem to have been fulfilled for Reynolds personally this year as well.

The sophomore from Overland Park, Kan., was on the K-State equestrian club team last year and was very close to qualifying for regional competition last year. She said she sees the opportunity to prove she should have been at

"Hopefully, I will be able to show what I can do," she said. "I feel a lot more prepared this year than last. I have had the opportunity to ride more horses and go to more shows. I have gained more confidence in my riding. At first the competitive riding was a little intimidating, but things have really smoothed over."

post-competition last year.

Reynolds has been showing horses for the past six years. She is the only member of the equestrian team with her own horse. Reynolds and Mickey, a nine-year-old pure bred, have won several competitions outside of K-State equestrian.

I guess you could say Mickey and I are pretty close," Reynolds said. "We spend a lot of time

Gratny, Rue and Reynolds agreed that perhaps the best part of going to nationals is the fact that they get to go together. They said the friendships they have made on the team is most meaningful.

"We really have a good time together," Rue said.

Regardless of what happens at nationals, the women said that being able to represent K-State on the equestrian team has been more than they have ever imagined.

"This year has been amazing," Gratny said. "Last year, there was just a few of us and we did our own thing. And now it is phenomenal that our team has really taken off this year. It is very impressive how successful we have been. To be on the first equestrian team ever is an experience in itself. This has been beyond anyone's wildest dreams."

WSU added three more runs in the eighth off Day, and the Shocks' Steve Haines came on in the ninth to pick up his eighth save of the season. But it was a stiff, see-saw battle early on. The Cats got on the board first, as Pat Maloney's single to left centerfield in the top of the first inning knocked in Osmar Castillo, giving the purple a 1-0 lead. The hit extended Maloney's hitting streak to 20 games - second best in the Big 12 this season and just five shy of the school record.

But the Shockers would counter in the bottom of the second, scoring two runs on three hits, including a pair of doubles, off Cat starting pitcher Scott Tallman to take a 2-1 advantage. The two teams would trade leads in the third inning, each scoring two runs, before Wichita native Josh Cavender, playing in front of a hometown crowd, gave the Cats an edge with one swing of the bat.

With two outs in the top of the fourth and Brad Anzman on first base, Cavender yanked the first pitch deep over the left field fence for his sixth home run of the year, propelling K-State to a 5-4 lead. The shot was his second in two games against Wichita State and extended his hitting streak to 11 games on the year.

"I was sitting on first pitch fastball, and I was able to get it up in the air and get some lift on it, but it doesn't matter - because we just lost twice," Cavender said. "We've got to pick our heads up. We've all got a big series this weekend against KU.

"It concerns me every time we lose a ball game, but you've just got to take what you get here, learn from your mistakes and carry it over into this weekend."

the inning.

Freshman Logan Sorensen led off the top of the fourth with a routinegrounder to second base, but J.D. Loudabarger's throw to first went __ awry and into the Shocker dugout, giving Sorensen a free trip to second. Drew Moffitt's loop single to right field advanced Sorensen to third, bul a fielding error by Maloney allowed the run to score, tying the game at five apiece.

And the score stayed at that count through two innings before Burgamy's RBI gave the Shocks the lead for good.

"This was important to them - we just needed to find a couple more holes, and we didn't," Clark said. "But that's baseball. I told them to forget about it. The important game's coming up, so we just need to focus on that."

K-State begins a three-game series with Kansas on Friday. A sweep of the Jayhawks, combined with a little help around the league, could propel the Cats into the Big 12 Tournament.

Individual tastes shine in home decoration

By REBEKKA MARTIN

Kansas State Collegian

With the spring semester winding down, many students are preparing to move out of their school-year homes and into new living situations for the summer and next school year.

Some people won't consider decorating their apartments until Mom comes to visit. but many already are considering which roommates need to bring what furniture and how their new home will be decorated.

Students willing to put some time and creativity into their decorating scheme might. be rewarded with a trendy apartment or house on a college budget.

If students need carpeting for their apartments, they can look at garage or residence hall sales for smaller pieces. They also can look for bargains at carpeting stores. Mark Humbarger from Manhattan Wholesale Carpet said end rolls are usually sold at discounted prices.

Humbarger said he recommends kitchen-type level loop carpet in a neutral color, such as beige, taupe or brown, for college students. He said carpet can be put down over existing carpet for extra padding.

"Probably the best thing to get is just something with the padding attached to it." Humbarger said. "You can just throw it down."

Humbarger said carpet squares are another option for students. He said the small intinued carpet sample: can be fit together to carpet a small apartment for only 50 cents or $1 per sample.

Once the basics have been covered, students can start the actual furnishing and decorating process.

Jason Brown, co-owner of Atomic Age, said students need to consider their tastes, especially if they want to buy nicer furniture they may want to keep for several years.

"It has to be of a style that you think you want to decorate with for a while, Brown said.

Brown said students should think about their habits when choosing styles and materials for furniture.

"If you're kind of a slob, you don't want a wooden table," he said.

Brown said students should also consider the quality of a piece of furniture in relation to its price and the likelihood that it will have to be replaced soon. He said, for example, particle board furniture with a paper veneer instead of a wood veneer will be destroyed if water is spilled on it.

Janette Taylor, Furniture Warehouse employee, said students do tend to buy less expensive furniture, but they want something that will look nice and last through their college years.

"They're only going to be using it for a few years," Taylor said. "What they're going to buy now is not what they're going to want five years from now."

Taylor said that when students graduate and find jobs, they can afford to buy more expensive pieces that will last them for several years.

Taylor said most pieces her store sells are contemporary. She recommended decorating in neutral colors and then adding other colors to bring out individual tastes.

Jan Zelch, floor manager at Ben Franklin, said she also recommends using light neutral colors of paint and carpeting and using accents to decorate with a personal touch.

Zelch said she recommends several inexpensive, practical products students can use to decorate.

For windows, Zelch found lace curtains that don't have to be bemmed so people can just put up a curtain rod and hang the curtains themselves.

"The lace curtains are really easy to put up," she said. "They wash beautifully."

Zelch said Gallery Glass, a Take liquid stained glass that can be painted on windows, also is a good temporary way to decorate because the picture can be peeled off. Precut and liquid leading are also available to create designs on windows inexpensively.

Zelch said Wallies, which are wallpaper cutouts made by The McCall Pattern Company in Manhattan, make good temporary decorations for walls. She said the cutouts. which come in several designs, just need to be wet and put up like wallpaper. They can be moistened again and taken down:

"Floral arrangements and garlands and swags would be fun to hang around." Zelch said, "Posters are always good."

She also said she recommended decorating lamp shades and making throw pillows to personalize living be used as trash cans or to hold things like books.

Humbarger said he's seen people buy leftover ceramic tile and break it to mix and match for counter tops and coffee tables. He said the display was sealed with a polyurethane sealant.

Some people prefer to decorate with items or themes that interest them. Brown said some students decorate with album covers.

Elizabeth Wood, Brown's wife and owner of Atomic Age, said she always is willing to offer advice to people. She said she helps many people with themes in color, style and time period.

"One girl came in and told me the colors she was using in her apartment and said she wanted more color in it," she said. "I helped her find things in turquoise and orange, and she says the apartment looks great.

Brown said some people decorate with colors and items from a specific decade.

Pretty much every decade has its own color scheme," Brown said. He said a lot of people decorate in a 1950s theme, which can be turquoise and pink.

decorate homes. These clocks at Atomic Age range from $37 to $62, BOTTOM: Adding color can really change a home. These Siestaware "We just look for things of styles that we think are unusual or fun," Brown said.

SUICIDE

Andrew Cobb jumped off the eighth floor of Haymaker Hall less than a month ago. Sam Wise shot himself in the head at the beginning of K-State spring classes. And a female K-State student attempted suicide twice before finding help.

These cases are by no means isolated incidents.

A recent study from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment documented the suicide mortality rate in Kansas in

According to the research, suicide mortality rate for Kansans between the ages of 15 and 24 grew to make suicide the second leading cause of death among that age

"It is a situation of alarm in Kansas because we're seeing the rates go down in other states," said Suzanne Crain Lewis, the acting president/CEO of the Mental Health Association of the Heartland in Kansas City, Kan., "Anything that's the second-leading cause of death is a huge concern.

Between 1989 and 1998 there were 3,108 suicide deaths in the "Kansas has seen a dramatic shift in suicide death rates among age groups over time," said Dr. Lorne A. Phillips, state registrar and KDHE's Center for Health and Environmental Statistics director. "The highest increase is in the 15- to 24-year-old age group.

There were 328 suicides in Kansas in 1998. The statistics show that that resulted in 11,437 years of potential life lost, following only deaths from cancer, unintentional injuries and heart disease.

The statistics are even more alarming considering that national rates and those in other states, including Missouri, are dropping. Kansas' rate increased 2.6 percent between 1997 and 1998, while the national rate fell 1.9 percent.

"It is something that has certainly caught our attention," said Julie Sergeant, director of the Office of Injury and Disability Prevention for KDHE.

"We're surprised at that rate. It's something that we have to look into and take seriously. We need real answers. We just need to have a better understanding. And it's not just the 15-24 age group, it's a concern across the life span."

Although suicides have jumped. Kansas professionals believe the statistics don't show the whole story.

Fred Newton, director of K-State's University Counseling Services, said that although the numbers are shocking they still deal with very small numbers. So even though the numbers are increasing. Newton said suicides in Kansas aren't at epidemic proportions. "It's a tough phenomena,"

Newton said. "Even though the numbers are small, it's still increasing, it's very serious and there are a lot of different reasons."

Also Lewis believes the statistics don't adequately present the number of attempted suicides in Kansas. She said that to every suicide there are hundreds of attempted suicides that go unreported.

"There's no accurate statistic to show how many are suicidal," Lewis said. "The amount of people that have so much pain and despair and that are willing and ready is bigger than what the statistics show."

Additionally, the data doesn't take into account accidental deaths. which was the No. 1 cause of death in the 15-24 age group, that were determined to be suicides.

"That's a whole other issue," Newton said. "Some people may consciously not want to kill themselves, but because of despair they go fast and end up getting into an accident. A depressed person may put themselves more at risk."

COLLEGIATE DEPRESSION

The statistics alone have professionals searching for answers to the obvious yet complex question -

Newton said the reasons behind a suicide are difficult to pinpoint and can be numerous. But many suicides can be directly related to the loss of a friend or a loved one.

"There's usually more than one reason, although the outcome maybe similar," Newton said. "Each person is different and may have very situational reasons. They may be having trouble in a relationship or suffer some sort of loss."

Nearly every suicide can be directly related to a form of depression. Depression is the No. 1 indicator or cause of suicide.

Although depression is one of the most common mental illnesses in the United States, Horton said that if the patient is treated with therapy and/or drugs they are 60 to 80 percent more likely to have the depression lifted.

Lewis said there are two types of depression: reactive and clinical depression. While reactive is just a temporary depressed feeling. clinical can be more serious.

You can almost always trace it back to a loss. It may seem minor to others, but it compounds on people," Lewis said. "We all get reactive depression as a result of a loss. Reactive goes away and you feel better. Clinical is much more long-standing."

Like many other mental illnesses such as schizophrenia and bipolar disorder, depression has its onset in the late teens and early 20s, making college students prone to the disease.

The suicide rate for teens and college-aged groups have increased 31.6 percent in Kansas over the past two decades.

And according to the National Association for Mental Illness, one in two teens think seriously about committing suicide.

"That's just astounding," Horton said. "Obviously, 50 percent of youths aren't committing suicide. But whether or not they get from thought to action is what we are concerned about."

Horton said that average collegeaged person has a lot of stresses and things on their mind.

Factors that include relationships, whether to go to college, what to study, where to live, parental pressures, career choices and peer groups can play a critical role in the psyche of a college student,

"That's a big transition area in a young person's life," Horton said. "That's when major life decisions are being made. There are just so many stressors and major decisions at that age. A lot of adults just don't appreciate how stressful it can be."

Many feel overwhelmed and feel as if they have nowhere to go.

"They feel life is miserable, and it just cycles," Newton said. "Their function level decreases, they have inadequate feelings about themselves, they may feel they're not doing well and they just can't get out. It's a downward spiral.

And although psychiatrists and clinical experts know a lot about what personal factors can play a role in suicide, they know little about the effect of situational factors - such as towns, states, life instances in an area and even climate.

"We know so little about what the local factors are," Horton said. "We know a lot about personal factors. As far as global reasons, we just don't know enough. So now state professionals are searching for more answers and looking for ways to relay to citizens the warning signs and the dangers of depression.

Kansas established a statewide Suicide Prevention Steering Committee that meets once a month to organize conventions and educational tools.

Next fall, the committee will have its second annual Suicide Prevention conference in Kansas.

"We have to increase what we know about the statistics," Sergeant said. "We need more research and increase ability to track more data."

Although Horton cannot bring her son back, she said she firmly believes that Kansans can make difference in preventing the next suicide.

In July. The Jerome Horton Foundation will sponsor a Gatekeeper Training Seminar in Topeka to train people to spot warning signs of possible suicide

The Foundation first begin in her living room just six months after lerome Horton took his life.

"Now we're dedicated," she said. "We just have to open our eyes and keep vigilant. But you can't delay. That's exactly what you don't want

Committee selects Homecoming theme

Kansas State Collegian

The theme for the 2001 K-State Homecoming will be "Purple Paradise.

Bernie Haney, associate of alumni programs and all-university homecoming chair, said a student committee came up with the theme.

"The students broke up into small groups and presented many different themes, and 'Purple Paradise' is the one that won, Haney said.

Erin Matyak, junior in business administration and homecoming publicity chair, said the committee is made up of students from the Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council and Residence Halls representatives as well as student ambassadors. graduate and undergraduate students.

The group is working on ideas for new events. They have contacted homecoming organizers from other universities for new ideas, Haney said.

working on events that already take place during the week.

"We are working on amplifying the events that we do have now as well," Haney said, Homecoming will begin Oct. 21 and will end Oct. 27 with the football game against the University of Kansas.

One goal for the committee, Haney said, is to get more of the students, alumni and faculty interested in the events.

"We want to have a universitywide Homecoming, and each year we try to get the student body more involved," Haney said.

Matyak said she agrees one of the major goals is to get the whole university, as well as the alumni,

"We try to make Homecoming bigger and better each year," Matyak said.

Matyak said she would also like to see the focus change a bit.

"We want to focus more on the alumni. They have not been the central focus in the past, and they should be. The alumni are what Homecoming is about - them The Homecoming committee is coming back." Matyak said.

U.S. to suspend contact with China's military amid efforts to recover plane

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C .- The Pentagon has suspended all contacts with China's military. officials said Wednesday.

The suspension actually had been ordered Monday by Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld and took effect immediately, said Army Lt. Col. Steve Campbell, a Pentagon spokesman.

It affects not just the U.S. military services but also the Defense Department's senior civilian leaders, he said.

In his memo, Rumsfeld directed "the suspension of all Department of Defense programs, contacts and activities with the People's Republic of China until further notice."

He said U.S. defense attaches abroad are permitted to attend social functions, as part of their usual activities, in which Chinese officials may be present. The suspension of military contacts came amid U.S. efforts to recover the Navy surveillance plane that made an emergency landing at a military airfield on China's Hainan island a month ago after colliding with a Chinese fighter jet.

A team of civilian contractors went aboard the Navy plane on Wednesday to begin assessing what it would take to bring the plane back to the United States. Rumsfeld's order apparently did not affect that effort, which is to resume on Thursday.

It was not immediately clear how Rumsfeld's order affects the U.S. defense attache and other military representatives in Beijing who have been closely involved in the plane incident.

It also was unclear whether the Bush administration would go ahead with a planned meeting of the U.S.-China Military Maritime Commission that was to discuss issues related to the surveillance plane incident.

No date had been set for the meeting but the Pentagon had indicated it might be this month.

Rear Adm. Craig Quigley, a Pentagon spokesman, said there were no military-to-military contacts with China scheduled for May, and the Pentagon had said previously it was going to reconsider how to proceed after May.

Thus, no planned contacts or activities have been canceled as a result of Rumsfeld's order. Quigley said, with the exception of U.S. attendance at a multinational military conference in Asia.

Quigley said there were no U.S. ship visits to Chinese ports scheduled for May.

The last one was at Hong Kong just days before the April 1 collision between the EP-3E Aries Il surveillance plane and the Chinese fighter jet.

The suspension of contacts is the latest in a series of ups and downs between the U.S. and Chinese military establishments.

The Pentagon broke off ties after the Chinese military's deadly 1989 crackdown on the pro-democracy movement in Tiananmen Square, and contacts had just begun to grow again when they were halted in 1996 after China lobbed missiles toward Taiwan.

Beijing broke off military ties in early 1999 after U.S. planes bombed the Chinese Embassy in Belgrade during NATO's campaign against Slobodan Milosevic. The Chinese never accepted the U.S. explanation that it was an accident, and didn't resume defense relations for several months. Just last month, shortly after the collision near Hainan island, Quigley defended the military-tomilitary program.

Despite the diplomatic tensions of the moment, the exchange program is still worth pursuing because it fosters communication between officers from the two nations and helps each side understand how the other thinks, Quigley said April 9.

Thus, the foreign military becomes "not just a bureaucracy or a nameless, faceless organization," Quigley said. "You really know that person, or maybe those six people; and there is value in that over the long haul."

Critics say all the past effort at building such personal relationships with Chinese officers seems to have done little good in the diplomatic standoff.

Special to the Kansas State Collegian

Susan swallowed an entire bottle of medication and slashed both her wrists during her first suicide attempt.

Susan said she got very scared, and the fear of actually dying prompted her to call the paramedics herself,

"The first time you cut yourself, you barely push. You're afraid that it might hurt," said Susan, who wishes to remain anonymous. "Then you realize that you didn't feel anything, so the second cut is harder. It feels good, and when you have been hurting for so long, anything that feels good makes you want to keep doing it, even if you know that it's hurting you."

Susan started her freshman year at K-State in fall 1999. She enrolled as a psychology major and looked forward to making new friends and enjoying her college experience.

Unfortunately, Susan doesn't have the typical college story. By October of that semester, Susan felt her life was falling apart. On Oct. 8, 1999, Susan attempted suicide for the first time.

Susan is not alone in her struggles with depression.

According to the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, suicide claimed the lives of 328 Kansans in 1998. Suicide became the second leading cause of death in Kansans between the ages of 15 and 24. The national level of suicide ranks as the eighth leading cause of death, putting Kansas well above the national average.

Susan was lucky to live after her first attempt, and after a brief absence from school and a promise to seek professional help, Susan returned to K-State. Things began to get better. Her involvement in new activities brought new friends and what she felt was a new start. Her weekly visits to a local mental health clinic began to work at the root of her problems, and she said she felt she was making

GETTING HELP

If you know someone who feels depressed or you personally feel like you have no one to turn to, help isn't far away. K-State offers several programs to provide students with the opportunity to get help.

K State has set up a program through University Counseling Services that allows students four free counseling sessions on any topic. The records of these sessions also are kept completely confidential and separate from any academic records for the university.

To make an appointment, call the University Counseling Services at (785) 532-6927. Other sources for help for those who are not K-State students are offered through public programs like The Crisis Center Inc., which offers 24-hour help. You can call the center at (785) 539 2785.

Globalization topic of Landon Lecture

By NICK BRATKOVIC

Kansas State Collegian

Former Mexican President Ernesto Zedillo said the world needs to increase levels of trade between countries in hisfirst public address since leaving office in December.

As part of the 121st lecture in the Landon Lecture Series, Zedillo said established regional trade treaties such as the North American Free Trade Agreement should be expanded and meet World Trade Organization standards.

Zedillo said isolationism doesn't work, and trade is key to improving world.

"In the global village, sooner rather than later, somebody else's poverty very soon ends up being one's own problem - of lack of markets for one's products," Zedillo said.

Chairman of the Landon Lecture Series Patron Ed Seaton said Zedillo will go down as the father of modern Mexican democracy for his efforts to keep the election process

However, Zedillo said after the speech that ensuring a peaceful election and turnover from his party - the PRI - the ruling of Vincente Fox was easy.

That's part of the new democratic party of Mexico. Sometimes you win, and sometimes you lose," he said. "I am pretty much democratic deep in my heart.

Zedillo also said he wishes Fox well in his efforts to further Mexico's development. Now, after leaving office, he also is chairing a finance development committee for the United Nations, and the committee will deliver its report later this month on ways to eradicate poverty.

In his address, Zedillo discussed the issue of global trade by building his argument for free trade around the economic concepts of Adam Smith and David Ricardo, who talked about how free trade can enhance the wealth of nations centuries ago.

He said isolationism hasn't worked in the world, and especially not in America. with the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act of 1930 that increased U.S. import tariffs to their highest level in history. This, he said, was responsible partly for the Great Depression.

"Fortunately, the genius of Roosevelt made that dark age of American history rather short-lived," he said.

Zedillo also addressed the movement of globaphobics or isolationists.

"In my view, they are as wrong as those within the political establishments of both developed and developing countries who continue to believe that isolationism is a good policy." Zedíllo said. "Isolationism never was, and never will be, a good policy."

Zedillo's Landon Lecture, centered around the topic of free trade, had similarities to the first lecture presented by the late Kansas Gov. Alfred Landon on Dec.13. 1966. It was a speech that discussed free trade and had the following passage of Landon's, which Zedillo quoted.

"Free trade... enables people of different nations to become better acquainted with customs, beliefs, ways of life, and government policies of another... When international understanding is thus achieved, political tensions are reduced and voices of reason are easier heard and understood," Zedillo recounted from Landon's initial speech.

Open trade, Zedillo said, has been the key for other countries' development, and he believes it will work in Mexico.

"My country's development was much delayed because of protectionism," Zedillo

Zedillo discussed the world's poverty situation, the way that half of the world's an important walk Saturday. Thomas, who has cystic fibrosis, a chronic genetic disorder that affects the lungs and digestive track, will start the Cystic Fibrosis Walk. "I got involved with the walk late, so I am not as involved as others," Thomas said. Thomas said she will be helping out in the morning with setting up, registering people and handing out refreshments

Nikki Spencer, sophomore in psychology and Chi Omega community service chair, said this is the first year the sorority has participated in the walk.

We are going to try to make it our spring philanthropy next year," Spencer, sophomore in psychology, said.

The Chi Omega house has been involved with different fund-raising activities for the walk, Spencer said. One of the most successful was the fund raiser at the Aggieville Pizza Hut.

"We were waitresses one night, and we were able to donate 80 percent of tips we made and 20 percent of sales to the cystic fibrosis fund," Spencer said. "The fund-raiser at Pizza Hut was a success. Many people showed up, and the restaurant was packed for three hours."

Another fund-raiser the Chi Omegas did was a T-shirt sale to all of the greek houses.

Walkers will trek through Manhattan on Saturday in an effort to raise money for the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

The event, which is sponsored by the Eastern Kansas Branch of the MS Society, is part of a national yearly campaign to raise funds for the national and local branches of the organization. This is the 10th year the Eastern Kansas Branch has participated.

"Sixty percent of the money raised stays here locally and goes to fund individuals in the Eastern Kansas area with MS," branch manager Sheri Daudet said. "The other 40 percent goes to our national office to fund research and hopefully find a cure for the disease.

The walk will begin at 9 a.m. at Manhattan Town Center, and walkers can register through Saturday morning.

Participants have the option of a three-mile walk or a six-mile walk. The three-mile walk begins at the West entrance of Manhattan Town Center. Walkers will travel to the east side of City Park, then to the Amoco on Laramie Street for a rest stop. Then they will continue down Moro Street through Aggieville, down the west side of City Park and back to

Official says U.S. risk of foot-and-mouth lower

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The government's top veterinarian said Thursday the risk of a U.S. outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease has been sharply reduced because of steppedup airport inspections and measures taken by Britain to end its epidemic.

"Today we're at a much lower risk than we were a month ago," said Alfonso Torres of the Agriculture Department's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

The United States has been free of foot-and-mouth since 1929.

Government officials have feared the heavy airline traffic across the Atlantic could bring the virus with it, but there is no greater risk of a U.S. outbreak than there was before the epidemic in Britain started earlier this year. Torres said.

"I don't feel we're at a higher risk here than we were ... a year ago." Torres said.

USDA is considering easing its ban on imports of raw meat and livestock from the European Union, Torres said. The restrictions would be lifted first for countries that have shown no signs of the disease. There have been isolated outbreaks in France, the Netherlands and Ireland.

Denmark, which supplies baby back pork ribs to U.S. restaurants, has been especially hard hit by the bara

Army develops lead-free bullets using tungsten

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The U.S. military is trying to go green, and not just with berets or fatigues.

In a multimillion dollar project. the Army has come up with a new bullet said to be just as deadly as the old lead-based one but cleaner for the Earth.

"We want to be good stewards of the environment," Army spokeswoman Karen Baker said.

The military says using "green ammunition" cuts soil contamination caused by the millions of slugs fired year after year at its practice ranges. In the new bullet, a less toxic tungsten composite replaces lead.

It's just one of the Pentagon's efforts to keep troops trained for combat while protecting the environment on military land. Critics say the armed forces have a long way to go on that score.

U.S. steps up efforts to reopen Middle East talks

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Bush administration is showing signs of a more aggressive effort to reopen peace talks between Israel and the Arabs. Israeli Foreign Minister Shirnon Peres said. however, that it is bard to restart the negotiations.

After meeting with President Bush on Thursday, Peres said: "We see eye to eye on how to handle the peace process."

Bush is informed on the issues and 'he doesn't want to impose, he wants to help," Peres said.

Depicted as standing aside and unable to accomplish much in the midst of seven months of bloody violence, the administration, with

Secretary of State Colin Powell in the lead, is now moving beyond calls for restraint to presenting an active three-point agenda.

Ahead of Peres' meeting with Bush, Powell outlined the U.S. goals as "going down the escalator of violence," encouraging Israel to lift economic curbs on the Palestinians and a resumption of peace talks.

Mostly in private, the administration urged Egypt and Jordan to pursue a diplomatic overture to-Israel and the Palestinians that would halt their confrontation and reopen negotiations.

"It is the beginning of a dialogue," Powell said Wednesday. - The Associated Press.

U.S. declines to punish crew in Cole explosion

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Top military officials defended the decision not to punish any crew member in connection with the Oct. 12 terrorist bombing of the USS Cole that killed 17 American sailors.

Although the destroyer's captain. Cmdr. Kirk Lippold, did not order his crew to take all the preventive measures recommended, even doing so would not have changed the outcome, Adm. Vernon E. Clark, the chief of naval operations, told the Senate Armed Services Committee Thursday.

Committee Chairman John Warner, R-Va., insisted that "military personnel in positions of responsibility must be held accountable for their actions or failure to act if we are to maintain the order and discipline essential to successful operations." - The Associated Press

Junction City skating tourney approaching

By JENNIFER O'NEILL AND APRIL MIDDLETON

Kansas State Collegian

It's been a year since Skate Park in Junction City had its grand opening, and skaters are planning another big celebration for later this month.

Jonathan Mitchell, sophomore in public relations, is organizing the Free For All Skating Tournament and Music Festival on May 12 and 13. The event is free and will consist of 14 live bands and about 100 skaters.

"We're trying to celebrate the sport of skating," he said.

Mitchell said they also are celebrating the life of Richard Gilbert, who died nine days after the grand opening tournament. The skate tournament will be dedicated to his memory.

Gilbert was an avid visitor to the skate park.

"It's sad to see us lose a 16-yearold like that," Mitchell said. "He may not be around anymore, but we're going to keep his memory alive."

Carla Gilbert, Richard's mother, set up a memorial in his name. The money received from the memorial has gone to make improvements to the park and fund tournaments.

The event has 20 corporate sponsors from all over the country providing prizes, food and other means of support for tournament participants.

Last year's grand prize winner in each category received $500 in prizes. Mitchell said prizes will be similar this year.

The four categories are ages 15 and under roller bladers and skate boarders, and 16 and over roller bladers and skate boarders.

Junction City Parks and Recreation will be on hand as a cosponsor of the event.

"This is a really good way to promote Skate Park," said Michelle Avritt, recreation program coordinator for Junction City Parks and Recreation. "It also brings in a lot of outside people, which is good for the local businesses."

She said Skate Park is good for the younger generation because it gives them a sense of belonging.

This year, a national in-line skating magazine is planning on covering the two-day event. Mitchell said he hopes the city will realize the popularity of the park and allocate money for additions and redesign.

SIFE receives recognition for promoting student entrepreneurs

By HEATHER GRACE

Kansas State Collegian

The members of Students In Free Enterprise won a regional champion award at the 2001 SIFE Regional Exposition and Career Opportunity Fair in Minneapolis, Minn.

The fair was April 12, and the award was based on the members' work in promoting business and entrepreneurs.

The group presented a 24minute presentation to a panel of corporate professionals and submitted a paper explaining the more than 14 projects the group completed throughout the year.

Mandy Kramer, vice president of SIFE, said the High School Symposium was the most rewarding of the projects for her. Thirteen schools from around Kansas came to the event. The students learned different aspects of business, leadership skills and were able to talk with K-State students who have their own businesses.

There also were training sessions for teachers on how to successfully bring entrepreneurship into their classroom curriculum.

Kramer said she has had a lot of positive feedback from the event.

"I just received an e-mail a month ago from a teacher updating me and letting me know how much they enjoyed coming and how much the kids learned, "Kramer said.

Allen Johnson, SIFE public relations officer, led a responsible credit-card management presentation for high school students.

The students learned how to handle their credit cards responsibly. They were told what to look for in a good credit card and what to stay away from.

Johnson said the project used to be targeted at college students, but was changed this year to reach students before they ever have a credit card.

Dan Suellentrop, SIFE president, said these projects are a way for K-State students to adapt what they learn in the classroom to real

"This allows a lot of people to boild upon their own skills and build new ones," Suellentrop said. "For some, it's challenging, and for others, it's natural, but overall, it's a learning process."

Squirrels have well-developed jaw muscles and chisel-like front teeth that can chew through most anything. These front teeth are kept sharp by gnawing on hard objects such as woody plant materials, seeds and nuts. This gnawing also serves another purpose. # The art of INDECISION

End-of-semester break down brings last-minute answers

I called my friend Marc in an absolute panic. I got his answering machine and left a cryptic message riddled by the choices, the first step can be daunting. frenzy I was feeling.

"Marc, you have got to help me. I am broken. I can't write. Writer's block has seeped in and stolen my words when I wasn't looking. You have got to help me write my column this week!" I started laughing insanely and hung up the phone.

MICHELLE BERTUGLIA Later that night in class, Marc calmed my fears and promised to take me for a drink and help me weave something together after his meeting.

As any good friend would, he called after the meeting. A few minutes later, he knocked on my front door. I grabbed my writing notebook and pen, and the writing guru and I were off. As we coasted into Aggieville. I could tell we both were feeling as if we had been bludgeoned by the world.

We sauntered into my favorite bar. He ordered the drinks, and I went straight for the dark booth in the corner. He set down the two rum and Cokes on the table and slid into the booth. For a while, we sat sipping our drinks and lamenting

Marc and I have been talking about life a lot latelyabout how we can't seem to find our niches within our culture. We, like millions of other 20-somethings, have found ourselves flailing around, wondering what the bell we are supposed to accomplish in this world. I told him my personal philosophy of why so many of us don't know what we are going to do when we grow up.

I always have seen American children as the golden children of the sun. We can do anything, ANYTHING in the world. As middle-class Americans, the ticket of how toachieve affluence sits in our hands and all we have to do is figure out how to cash it in. We all have been banded detailed instructions of exactly how to perpetuate the great American dream. But from watching our parents' generation and looking at how they have gone about making their dreams a reality, we have become disenchanted.

The Baby Boomers have worked hard to be where they are today. Most work an excess of 40 hours a week so they can support the kids and make the house, car and credit card payments. People in our parents' generation scare me. They run so hard from one task to the next, with very little time to catch their breath. As an up-and-coming generation, we look at our parents, shake our heads and quietly say to ourselves, "I want something different."

Like idealistic cowards, Marc and Halked about how tough finding that something different can be. We discussed how we couldn't deal with selling our souls to corporate America after graduation. But we also realized we couldn't hide under the guise of graduate school or the Peace Corps. for the rest of our lives. As golden children, we know we have to make a choice and choose a path. But with so many

A drink later, we decided to call it a night. We had not done any stellar writing, solved any of the world's problems or even our own. But we identified, connected and spilled the fears that well deep in our souls. Feeling as clouded as when we had left for the bar, I crawled into my bed and prayed for two things, my column idea would come to me the next day and that Marc and I would find some peace.

The next morning, I dragged myself out of bed and was bedraggled and crabby as ever. Finding the fairy of column inspiration had not whispered anything in my ear while I slept. I decided to check my e-mail and see what I had missed overnight. I found an e-mail from Marc. Through reading his message, it seemed as if he had found some sort of temporary peace, a quiet calm in the turbulent storm of the future. Trying to lift my spirits, he one of his favorite quotes, "Do not go gentle into that good night Rage, rage against the dying of the light." It looked like the column fairy had arrived while I slept.

So many people I know will be graduating next week. Many have no idea what their futures will hold. Others will begin working a few days after graduation. And the rest of us will return to Manhattan next August as lost as ever. But, regardless of whether if you have followed your parents' footsteps or, struck out on your own, try not to let things eat you up. Lets face it, as a generation we have so much to accomplish and so many wounds to heal. Don't let this culture of excess and choice drag you down muttering in a hopeless confusion. Like columns, the answers will come. They always do. Let your passion and instincts guide you. Stand firm, find your light and rage.

U.S. veterans deserve thanks despite negative image

War is defined in the dictionary as the following: a state of open, armed, often prolonged conflict carried on between nations, states or parties.

That sounds tame, but then, war is a subject that always has been about the old English rule of show and don't tell.

But that generic dictionary example is as close as I ever want to get with America.

I do not want to be any closer. As I write this, I question if I should be. I never have served in the military, been in ROTC., slept in the wilderness with my life on the line, participated in hand-to-hand combat or anything else that constitutes fighting for your country. So, I guess what I want to say is thank you to all of the veterans who fought for the United States, but especially those who laid it all on the line in the Vietnam War. This column will do just that, but it will also attempt to discuss the issue of former Sen. Bob Kerrey. All too often, we vilify veterans, and it is time we say thank you.

Thinking of war and the battles they went through puts it all into perspective I think my life is hard and that finals suck, but boot camp must be extremely interse. If probably makes a 90-minute lecture look like a nap.

Well, truthfully, sometimes a 90minute lecture is nothing more than a cat nap, but you get the point, What our military experiences in times of conflict makes dead week actually seem dead. Lack of dead week probably pales in comparison to what military people must go through in peace time training. As I said earlier, war is terrible, and all the words in Roger's Thesaurus for describing it would not do it any justice. 50, I cannot pass judgment on Kerrey for what he did in Vietnam at Thanh

Phong. They are questioning the incident who was killed and how they met their demise. If you watched "60 Minutes II" on Tuesday, you were able to realize that there were conflicting reports over what happened. The discrepancies occurred over how far they were from the people they were shooting, who was at risk, and what exactly Kerrey's role was. Now, it is debatable what will come as a result of the conflict. Should he give back the honors and medals be received for the war?

I understand the investigation. However, as I said earlier, I cannot knock or pass negative judgment on these Vietnam veterans more than 30 years after the fact. Why would I?

Why, as a country, would America judge his actions? Sure, the acts were vicious and scary, but this was war. This was hell for these men, and sure, their judgment might have been skewed, but these people stood up on a line and fought for America.

I applaud these soldiers: I want to say thank you for the time they spent there. and for being soldiers who answered the call when America asked.

These people fought a fight and did what was in their heart. All seem to have permanent scars. You cannot go to war and not be changed forever. The realities of war never are forgotten.

Still, would it not be just as well to say thanks for your contribution and leave these people to go on their way? Honestly, we sit and listen to the facts of it all. The events sound horrific, gruesome and even bone-chilling. However, to live through them had to be a hundred times as intense. Hell, 100,000 times as intense, and some say the dreams still haunt

They cannot escape them, but they sure as hell try.

But then, Vietnam veterans always have tried. They tried to fight a war, while a generation questioned and protested. These people stood on a line and fought for democracy, when others changed their style and listened to John Lennon music protesting, which in itself is something communism would not have allowed.

Today, this seems irrelevant. As a country, we have moved on. We elected President Clinton to two terms of office in spite of not going to Vietnam. Why then must we beat down the men who chose to fight in the hell of a rice paddy jungle?

These veterans must be thanked for their contribution. I don't know the events or what happened exactly, for Kerrey, but you cannot fault him or any other veteran for fighting a war.

Instead, let me say thank you for defending America. To all veterans and military personnel, thanks for being our defenders. We couldn't live freely without

University Web site deserves more attention, extra funding

One of the first contacts many people have with our university is the K-State home page on the Internet, and as far as first impressions go, our home page gives a great one.

Last year, the K-State home page was named second best college and university Web site in the nation, behind the California Institute of Technology. Incredibly, this award was won by a fulltime staff of two with a yearly budget of well under $15,000.

On the plus side, they've seen their staff doubled in the past few months, with the new employees undergoing training, but their budget has seen no such increase. This situation makes me sad. I'd be curious to see the size of the staff and budget with which CIT supports its home page. Oh well, I guess it's just another award-winning, underappreciated aspect of life at K-State, like the Collegian or the track team.

I know the school year is ending, and we don't have to think about budget cuts and the like for another three months or so, but I'd like somebody in Student Senate to take this on as a pet project in the fall. Just think of how cool "introduced budget legislation" will look on vour résumé.

If our home page can win national recognition with a microscopic budget and staff of two, just imagine what could be accomplished with an extra employee (bringing the total to five) and a budget more than $15,000 per year.

Supplements require caution

Kansas State Collegian

Popular dietary supplements such as Metabolife and Xenadrine that contain ephedrine alkaloids can cause serious side effects. possibly even death.

Dianna Schalles, registered dietician with health education and promotion at Lafene Health Center, said elevated blood pressure and elevated heart rates could be dangerous and are common side effects with drugs containing ephedra.

The drug, which acts as a metabolism stimulant, commonly is used with caffeine. It's this combination, Schalles said, that can be potentially dangerous because it speeds up the heart.

"A person walking around doesn't know if they have a tendency to an irregular heartbeat, and you don't want to find out by

Education Council Web site, the drug is being manufactured in safe quantities.

Now, the industry and national standard for diet supplements containing ephedrine alkaloids, which are extracts of the plant and other alkaloids such as preservatives, is at a maximum of 25 mg

Schalles said she recommends staying clear of products that have 12 mg or more of ephedrine alkaloids per dose

However, studies are being conducted to determine if ephedra and ephedrine alkaloids are dangerous

While the FDA has recommended that no more than 8 mg are taken per dose, those recommendations have been withdrawn and are under review.

Michele Martinez, sales

not abused. "I think that if you don't take it the way you're supposed to, you

Shelle Barton, graduate student in English, is looking forward to the third Saturday in May. And it has nothing to do with the end of the school year.

Together with seven other K-State students, she will teach creative writing for the general public.

In poetry or fiction, people can be themselves and show their personality, Barton said. Besides, it is an exercise for their brains.

Flint Hills Writers Forum aspires to bring together writers and poets of all ages, from novices to experienced amateurs, to K-State on May 19.

"We live in a society where we get caught up in racing from one activity to another with little time to reflect on or understand the meaning of what we are doing," said David Stewart, assistant dean of the Division of Continuing Education.

The forum can provide a time to pull back and do that reflection.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. ob Baffert has had multiple starters in the Kentucky Derby before, but none came to town with the fanfare showered on the chestnut colts Point Given and Point Given, battle-tested as a 2year-old, has raced only twice this year, but impressive wins in the 5an Felipe and Santa Anita Derby earned him the favorite's role in the 127th Derby Saturday at Churchill Downs.

Congaree, who raced only once last year because of surgery for a chip in a knee, is unbeaten in three starts as a 3-year-old and tagged himself as a Derby contender by winning the Wood Memorial in his stakes debut.

'It's good to go hunting for bear with two bullets," Baffert said after the big Congaree joined the massive Point Given as a Derby contender.

Baffert was on target when Real Quiet gave him his second Derby victory and Indian

Charlie finished third in 1998, but he fired blanks with multiple entries in 1996 and 1999. His other Derby win was with Silver Charm, his only starter in 1997

'I can't say they're the best two horses I've ever brought, but they are good horses," Baffert said. "They're as good as Real Quiet and Indian Point Given was made the 9-5 favorite, with Congaree the 5-1 second choice. The last time a trainer had the first two finishers in a Derby was when Ben Jones saddled Calumet Farm's Citation and Coaltown in 1948.

Their main rivals in a 17-horse field appear to be front-runners Balto

Star, winner of the Spiral and Arkansas Derby; Millennium Wind, the Blue Grass winner; and > Monarchos, winner of the Florida Derby and second in the Wood Memorial.

Baffert got his wish of a middle spot - No. 8 - in the gate for the speedy Congaree.

Point Given, who will lay off the pace, will start from Post 17. Ballert had hoped Point Given also would get a middle post, but he said he would have been upset if the colt had to start from the rail, forcing him to get away quickly so as not to be squeezed back.

Baffert also was pleased his colts would be two of the last three to be loaded into the gate under a double loading system which begins with 1-8 and ends with 9-16. The 17 then is loaded alone.

Silver Charm won for Baffert from the No. 5 post, and Real Quiet won from No. 3. Four of the past six winners, however, have won from No.

"In the end, though, it's all the horses, not the post," Baffert said.

Gary Stevens will ride Point Given in a bid for his fourth Derby win. One of those victories came in 1995 on Thunder Gulch, the sire of Point Given.

"I think this is an exceptional crop of 3-year-olds," Stevens said. "A lot of people have put us in the winner's circle, but the Derby is the Derby."

While Point Given, owned by the Thoroughbred Corp. of Prince Ahmed Salman of Saudi Arabia, has had only two starts this year, he raced six times as a 2-year-old, posting three wins and three seconds. One of the wins and two of the seconds were in Grade I

K-State to face intrastate rival Kansas

By DEREK BOSS

Kansas State Collegian

K-State won't take a winning streak into what arguably could be the Wildcats' biggest series of the

But that doesn't worry head coach Mike Clark as his squad begins a three-game stint with rival Kansas (21-29, 5-22) at 4 p.m. today at Frank Myers Field.

Preserving the opportunity for a Big 12 Tournament bid might be on the line, but Clark said he feels good about the way his ball club is playing.

In fact, the Cats (24-24, 9-15) accomplished everything they wanted in their 9-5 loss to Wichita State on Wednesday night - except win, he said.

At the plate, K-State scored five runs on five hits against Shocker starter Justin Maureau, whose six victories on the season ranks tied for first among WSU pitchers.

"We did a lot of good things." Clark said. "We saw a good pitcher, and we knocked him out in the fourth inning. And we had scoring opportunities against the other guys, too. We either hit it at them or just didn't have a good at-bat at the time. "But we'll be OK.

On the mound, K-State cycled through five different pitchers, all of whom Clark said needed some game action to look sharp for the KU series.

He especially was pleased to get work out of junior Luke Robertson and senior Kelvin Day. Day hadn't was replaced by Day. It was enough to get under Robertson's skin, Clark said, but it only will make him stronger in today's outing.

"Luke's got his dander up right now," Clark said Wednesday night. "I like that when he goes into a big game. because he's pretty pissed off that we pulled him out. So he's going to have an attitude out there, and if he can take that and apply it the right way, he could be tough to handle Friday."

After today's game, the series moves to Lawrence for the weekend, with Kevin Melcher on the hill for the 7 p.m. Saturday matchup and junior Brock Smith starting for the 2 p.m. Sunday set.

As far as a Big 12 Tournament bid is concerned, the Cats will need help from around the league, as they sit ninth in the conference trailing Iowa State (9-11 Big 12) and Oklahoma (10-13-1).

Even if K-State wins out with a three-game sweep of KU this weekend and two victories over California on May 12 and 13, the purple will have to count on Iowa State to get caught in a slump.

If the Cyclones finish the season with a 2-4 mark, with three-game series against both Nebraska and Oklahoma, and K-State ends on a perfect 5-0 note, the Cats make the tournament snatching the eighth and final spot.

Getting that bid is something the team is taking very seriously, senior Josh Cavender said Wednesday night.

"It's real important, especially to us seniors. That was the goal we set at the beginning of the year, and we're so close," he said. "I know nobody wants to let anyone down. We've got 34 or 35 guys on this team and three coaches, and everyone's going to give it their all regardless.

"It's just the little things. We've got to get the little things done."

Top 5 funniest Collegian sports moments of past year recounted

It finally started to sink in Wednesday night. There I was, sitting in the press box of Wichita State's Eck Stadium, covering the K-State/WSU game, when reality began to set in. This was my last story of the semester.

No more deadlines. No more painful interviews. No more late nights in front of the keyboard. Heck, no more referring to Michael Noll as my "editor" - heaven forbid.

Hold up, Noll just walked in (it's Thursday morning as I write this). He says he needs a baseball precede from me by the end of the day.

Go figure.

But back to my point. There simply was a sense of satisfaction sweeping over me. After all, it was a really good year for the Collegian sports staff - thanks to K-State athletics.

DEREK BOSS

Our football team beat Nebraska for just the second time in 32 years and capped the season with a convincing victory over Tennessee in the Southwestern Bell Cotton

Women's volleyball advanced to the Sweet 16 of the NCAA Tournament for the first time in school history. The men's basketball team surprised a few people under new head coach Jim Wooldridge, with two upsets of Top 25 opponents and four conference victories - twice that of previous season. Even this spring, the track team has several athletes qualified for the NCAAs, equestrian features numerous riders bound for nationals, and the baseball team is on the verge of earning a bid to the Big 12 Tournament.

In all, it was a memorable year, but not without a little humor mixed in.

Therefore, without further adieu, here's a little behindthe-scenes action of the Collegian sports staff this year. It's no David Letterman Top 10 list, but here are my Five Funniest Collegian Sports Moments of the year (Note: Aliases will be used for confidentiality).

5. THE RECORDER INCIDENT

It was my first football "Gameday" edition as sports editor last fall, and things were a bit hectic, to say the least. I only had assigned myself four stories this time (since I had a staff of about three), giving one of my newer writers a chance for a byline. We'll call him "Dan."

After attending the Tuesday press conference, he came into the newsroom that night to type up the quotes.

But there was one small problem.

He failed to notice that during his interviews, the batteries in his tape recorder were completely and positively dead - and on top of that - he didn't write anything down on his note pad.

He had nothing

After my stress level hit the roof, we ended up just running the pictures that much bigger to fill the space. I would've preferred a big white space that read: "This is where Dan's story was supposed to go."

4. THE HEADLINE

On Feb. 4, K-State baseball defeated Doane 11-3 at Frank Myers Field, playing ONE GAME. Our writer, who we'll also call "Dan," wrote the story for the Collegian, but in the next day's paper, the headline read: "K-State splits home opener against Doane."

Now, it wasn't Dan's fault, but needless to say, he got quite a number of ugly calls in the Campus Fourum.

3. THE PHOTO SPRINTS

It was Dec. 2, the day of the Big 12 Championship game pitting K-State vs. Oklahoma. The photographers were meeting another reporter and myself at Kedzie Hall to head to Kansas City, Mo.

But I decided to take my sweet of time, so we ended up getting to Arrowhead Stadium only half an hour before

Now, that's plenty of time for us reporters to stuff our face at the media buffet, but the photogs had to practically run to get set up for the game.

I guess I felt a teeny, itty-bitty dab of sympathy. But not much.

K-State men's basketball had just lost to lowa State at Bramlage Coliseum, and the media settled in at the postgame interview session.

One reporter, who we'll refer to as "Michael," asked whether a coach would have to back off the officials after the opposing coach received a technical foul.

Let's just say the reply (or lack thereof) left "Michael" with cottonmouth for the next couple of weeks. And now, the No. 1 FUNNIEST COLLEGIAN SPORTS

MOMENT of the year. 1. THE CHEW

Again, "Dan" is the victim of this one. It was the K-State/Illinois men's basketball game at Bramlage Coliseum, and Dan was a tad naive. For some reason, he thought chewing tobacco was allowed in the arena.

So there he was, enjoying a generous dip, when he accidentally knocked his spit cup off the press table. Reacting quickly, he caught the cup — in mid-air, mind you - so only a minimal amount of tobacco juice leaked out. But in the process, he happened to knock over his drink, which proceeded to flood the table. Let's just say quite a few people noticed.

At the next timeout, the referee came over to Dan and asked, "Son, was that chewing tobacco?"

"Yes, sir," Dan replied. After a stern lecture, he spit out the dip, and his face began to get redder than a flaming jalapeno.

So there's my list — but I don't doubt we'll find something to top it next year.

Counseling offers hope for couples

Kansas State Collegian

The process leading up to the most sacred vow, uniting two souls, is not just about pink or peach frosting on the cake, or how many are invited to the reception. With 10 percent of all adults now divorced, engaged couples are seeking premarital counseling to ensure a prosperous matrimony.

Premarital counseling assesses the strengths and weaknesses in a relationship, finding the areas that could possibly be a problem or become one, said Dr. Judd Swihart of Cornerstone Family Counseling Center.

"This type of counseling is all about prevention," Swihart said. "We identify potential problem areas and solve them before they build into Areas the counselor and couple would look at include finances after marriage, communication, children, sexual expectations, role relationships, spiritual beliefs and the personalities of each individual, Swihart said.

Matt Tate, junior in biology, will get married in less than a month to his girlfriend of 2 1/2 years. Tate said they have attended seven counseling sessions at St. Francis Episcopal Campus Ministry, and the discussions brought up many important issues the couple had not yet thought about

"They made us write up a budget. which was really good, because now we have a better feel for how much money we will have when we live. together," Tate said. "Also, by just hearing Laura talk about her feelings towards me to the counselor made me realize how much she appreciates me, which strengthened my feelings

Churches are a popular way to receive premarital counseling, not only because they are free of charge. but they are also a requirement. Father Mel Long of St. Thomas More Catholic Church requires all couples getting married in the church to choose between a weekend retreat or attending a series of counseling

"Marriage is the most important decision in a person's life, and you must prepare for the emotional side, not just the ceremony." Long said. "We provide a place for engaged couples to come and have a chance to only focus on the other person."

The weekend retreat, called Engaged Encounter, is conducted by two trained married couples and is made up of about 25 couples, Long said. There is also a test couples can take that will score and determine how great their strengths and weaknesses are and compile them into a graph. "The test provides a visual graph of the relationship, and we use that to find weaknesses and transform them into strengths," Long said. "We do this because we feel couples should have every opportunity to develop the strongest relationship they can to achieve a happy and successful marriage.

K-State, has been married for more than two years and said premarital counseling opened a new line of communication for her and her husband.

"The counselor really brought up subjects that we would have never assumed would become an issue in the future," Jackson said. "We learned a lot about each other's personalities and how to compromise with each other, which has been extremely useful now that we're married."

Jeff Saale, junior in English, and his fiancee are planning on attending a weekend retreat through their church. Though at first Saale was skeptical, he said he thinks the counseling will reassure them that they are making a responsible decision.

"We want to be educated, with as little surprises as possible," Saale said. "At first, I was thinking it would deal a lot with religion and faith since it will be through a church, but from what I'm told, we will look closely at us and not really focus on anything else. I think this will give us a better understanding of what we're in lor."

Another benefit of premarital counseling. Swihart said, is the relationship the couple begins with their counselor.

"The couple forms a healthy relationship with the marriage counselor, so that later on when they hit a snag, they feel comfortable coming back and getting help before it escalates to a bigger problem than it needs to be.

All marriages have some problems, said Tamara Hawk, adjunct professor of social work at K-State and LSCSW with a private practice.

"Premarital counseling is useful because most couples are in an idealized relationship with each other and may not see or want to see problems," she said. "Problems married couple have were established early on in the relationship and they just keep growing until you face them."

Chris Domenico, Manhattan resident, now divorced, did not go to premarital counseling and said he feels it might have made him think twice about marriage.

"Neither of us liked our familie so the idea was that we were going to make our own family, although everyone was against our marriage," he said. "I think that if we had gone in counseling before, we would not have gotten married."

Though not all small problems should be cause for concern, Hawk said trained people will know which problems to focus on.

"Many people don't realize how problems will develop, so you should deal with them now, and learn how to deal with them the next time they become present," Hawk said.

Tate, pleased with the outcome of the counseling, said having support from his church only helped confirm his love for his fiancee.

"I feel in love, and I'm glad," Tate

Organic growth MFA candidate returns to Manhattan with art CROSSWORD By Eugene Sheffer 11 Diamond corners 17 Obliterates

By JENNIFER L. SHERRY Kansas State Collegian

Linda Ross Edwards has returned to her alma mater to display a perfected art she began 20 years ago.

Showing at Urban Designs in Aggieville, "Image, Surface & Form," is Edward's master of fine arts exhibit of jewelry, metal smithing and prints. The show also has new works by Craig Calnan and Suzanne Hale, two Manhattan artists.

Edwards, who began her MFA program in 1980, moved to Connecticut a year later to follow her husband, putting her work on hold. In 1999. Edwards returned to Manhattan to complete her studio work and receive her master's degree.

"I was really surprised at how simple it was to pick back up and finish my work," Edwards said. "I'm dealing with the same professors I had before, and I have a lot of dear friends in Manhattan, so it was incredibly

Edwards works with metals, like copper and silver, etching the plates to create monoprints. This technique is accomplished by repeating the same image, but altering the color to create a variation in the prints.

The process Linda uses is very challenging to do," Deborah Minner, owner of Urban Designs, said. "Anyone who is into metalsmithing just marvels at her pieces."

A unique aspect of Edwards' work, Minner said, is what she does with the metal etchings after the prints are made.

"She's influenced by organic forms in her environment, so she uses cross sections of plant matter to obtain the texture for her prints, and then uses the same metal to create very detailed sculptures," Minner said.

Edwards washes the ink from the metal and welds the pieces into a sculpture, keeping the texture from the print

There's something about the quality of metal that really appeals to me,' Edwards said. "I try to make the metal forms give an illusion of balance and flow of symmetry.

Though each artist utilizes different mediums, the amount of attention given to surfaces is the same with all three artists, inspiring the title of the show, Minner said.

"We put these artists together because all of their art deals with the common theme of surface textures and form," she said. "They relate to each other, but are also very unique.

Suzanne Hale, artist and registrar and collections manager for the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, said she was pleasantly surprised at how well the three artists fit together for this exhibit.

"I'm happy to have my work displayed with Linda's and Craig's," she said. "We all deal, in > with surfaces and really taking something and making it abstract in a way. Hale is a recent K-State MFA graduate, and said she primarily does mixed-media art, focusing on a tangible object, like her recent interest of bicycles and household items, to inspire her. 'Lately, I use objects that attract me visually," she said. "I feel that objects have different ways, certain personalities, and I like to give them human charac teristics in my

Working at the Beach art museum, Hale said it is nice to be around original art objects, so she can see the real surface quality.

"I like to pay attention to the qualities of the actual object when looking at other art and when making my own, and you can't get that through reproduction," she said.

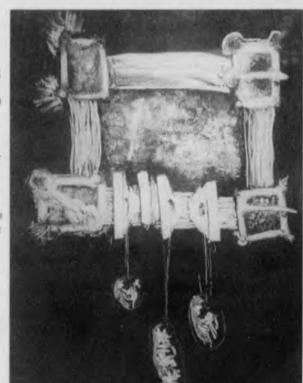

The third artist in the exhibit, Craig Calman, is working on his MFA in print making. He deals with a variety of techniques. including etchings, calligraphy and monotype, using symbolism as an important role in his work.

"Craig's work is not actually 3D. like the other artists, but his works deal with transcending from one plain to another," Minner said. "It's more conceptual."

Minner, who has studied sculpture and metal, said she finds the work of all the artists intriguing, but has a special respect for Edwards' pieces.

"Linda has extremely fine craftsmanship and the fantastic feel of her work is irresistible to people.

The end of the semester is here, summer is right around the corner, and with an outdoors party, Pomeroy will make its awaited return to Manhattan. Dean Hopkins, bassist of Pomeroy, said a visit to Manhattan is long overdue.

"It's about time to play again before everyone goes home," he said. "We love it so much here. It's where Pomeroy came together."

Kicking off the show is the Kansas City-area band Jose PH, and slated to perform after them is the Omaha, Neb., band Mandown.

Jeff Hawkinson, owner of Silverado Saloon, said this show is more unique than other shows.

"It's an end-of-thesemester party," he said. "This is the first time we have ever done a show outside in the parking lot."

Hawkinson said Silverado had to take extra measures in order to have the show performed outside.

"I had to get special permits through the city, state and alcohol beverage control." he said.

Pomeroy created its first funk hip-hop sounds in Manhattan in spring 1998. Since then, they have been touring all over the Midwest in support of their first album,

More information

Pomeroy will perform Saturday outside Silverado Saloon. Doors will open at 6 p.m. and the show starts at 7 with two opening acts. Tickets are available at the door

"Inside the Shine," and they have big plans for the summer.

"We're ready to get back out there and tour," he said. "Hopefully, this summer we can open for a major act and tour nationally.

Hopkins said playing for Manhattan gives Pomeroy a more comfortable feeling.

"We feel like we know everybody," he said. "The crowds seem more crazy, and the fans can connect with us."

Dave Backhaus, bassist for Mandown, said they thoroughly enjoy playing with Pomerov

"We like playing with bands we enjoy watching ourselves," he said. "It helps us get exposure outside of Omaha." Mandown first came together two years ago and has released one full-length album. Backhaus said the four-member band had toured from Des Moines, Iowa to Denver to stand behind the first album. The release of the second one is coming up quickly, he said. "May 25 is the release of

'Shoulders," he said. "It will be exciting for Mandown because we're throwing a huge CD release party." Backhaus said Manhattan can look forward to Mandown performing a good live show.

"We have a lot of energy, and outdoors it's more fun because it creates a more festive atmosphere," he said. "We'll do our best to put on a good show." Hopkins said he also is looking forward to Saturday night.

"I'd like to see a good mixture of several new and old faces," he said. "I like to receive that positive vibe from the audience. That always helps us put on a good show."

headway. Susan salvaged what was left of her first semester in college and hoped to make a fresh start after the new year began.

Winter break came and went, and Susan returned to K-State with a positive attitude. But her ghosts were only silenced for a moment.

"You close your eyes, and you can't get away from yourself," she said. "You plug your ears, but the hatred only gets louder. You can never run away from yourself."

After the first week of classes, Susan began to feel the familiar stresses and depression that appeared to accompany her college

"I had gotten a credit card bill that Saturday. It was for $500, and I didn't have the money," she said. "I didn't even know how to tell my parents that I even had a credit card, let alone one that was in debt. I couldn't deal with it, so I just stuck it in a pile of bills and said I would try to pay it off next month."

After Susan's first suicide attempt, she had accrued a significant debt due to medical bills. She didn't know how to pay them off. and she was scared.

She was ostracized by her peers, who didn't know how to handle her situation, and by her family, who she felt had abandoned her.

"I was tired of being alone and afraid of life. I was tired of not having any friends, tired of fighting with everyone, tired of them not understanding when I needed help."

Susan was tired of life. On the evening of Jan. 16, Susan returned home from what she said was a pleasant day out. She got in the elevator in her residence hall lobby, and as the doors closed. everything just fell apart.

"I couldn't contain the anger inside. I started to cry for what felt like forever. All I could hear was the monster inside of me saying. You're pathetic. No one cares,' And you try to say that you're a good person. But you can't fight yourself.

You just let one of them take over." Susan hadn't slept in days, and she had had the flu for more than a week. She felt terrible, and that only added to her growing depression.

"When I got to my room, I just wanted to go to sleep. So I took some cough syrup that the doctor gave me for my cold."

The cough syrup contained codeine for Susan's insomnia.

"I really wanted to go to sleep, so I took some more until I had finished the bottle. I wanted to talk, just talk to someone. So I called one of the crisis hotlines."

As Susan talked to the women on the other end of the phone, she came to the conclusion that she didn't want to live any longer.

"I got out the razor and started cutting my leg," she said. "I kept talking to her because I didn't want to be alone when I died.

Susan cut into her main artery, located along her inner thigh. The artery is large enough to cause a person to die from the blood loss. Susan's cut, fortunately, was not deep enough to result in sufficient

Although her injuries would not have resulted in death, Susan's intent was to die that night.

People who never have felt deep depression cannot comprehend the reasoning behind suicide attempts, Susan said. Society looks at those who do not want to live as rejects, rather than people who are sick and simply need help.

That notion, Susan said, is why many people who unsuccessfully attempt suicide feel even worse after it. The feeling of loneliness and depression are amplified by the looks from people who know and the whispers heard around dark Ata Karim works as a licensed psychologist at University Counseling Services. Karim believes suicide at K-State is not a problem.

"We have so few successful suicides in any year. But it's always sad when anyone takes their own life," Karim said.

The goal of University Counseling Services is not to provide hospital facilities for mental illness. The facilities at K-State are equipped to assist students in their day-to-day life issues, promote wellness and psychological well-being.

University Counseling Services is located on the second floor of Lafene Health Center and is capable of assisting students with the appropriate services they might need

Susan was not seen at University Counseling Services, but said she believes they would have helped her deal with some of the social issues she was facing, one of which was reintegrating into her residence hall community.

"Everyone thinks you're crazy," she said. "And every day, you have to go back to the same room, with the same people who pretend to like you as they tell everyone to be careful what they say around Susan, 'cause she's a nut."

After a week in a mental health facility, doctors decided Susan was able to resume her life. They released her with new medication and a weekly visit to her psychiatrist. Their new diagnosis was that Susan had bipolar disorder.

That means that she has no emotional floor or roof. If left untreated, one day she could be higher than cloud nine. She could love life and everything about it. and the next day fall into a deep, dark depression.

"Bipolar is sort of like living your life on a roller coaster. Some days you have big drops, and other days you have little drops, and then sometimes you just have flat parts." Susan said.

It's been over a year since Susan's last attempt at suicide. Since then, Susan has worked to get her medication reduced with the hope that someday soon she can learn to control her disorder with out it. Susan now is working with her therapist to solve some of her deeper issues they feel contribute to her low self-esteem and the problems that she faces.

"I was the perfect child, perfect girl, that everyone wanted me to be. But I didn't know who I was."

This pursuit of perfection became an obsession for her. Nothing was good enough, including herself. That, combined with a few mistakes many young adults make, created a low on Susan's roller coaster that almost caused her to end her own life.

Susan now is able to talk about her experiences with few tears. She said she is learning to come to terms with her monster and that she is learning to control it.

'With a lot of help, it made me

step back and look at what was going on in my life. I had been sad for a very long time, for years, 1 never really liked myself. I could never remember a happy little girl. It was just time to change. You can't live that way. Your choices are either to fix your life and learn to be happy or die. Because being miserable all the time is just like being dead," she said.

Susan has a long road ahead of her. But for the first time in her life, she said she feels she can look forward without fear of what lies ahead. For the first time in her life, she said, she knows without a doubt that she is not alone, and that she doesn't have to fight all her battles by herself.

Susan said she credits her motivation for getting better to a dear friend.

"One person who wasn't family and who didn't have to be by my side was there," she said. "He told me that he wouldn't come to my side like this again, and that three strikes, and I was out. I just decided right then that I wanted him there. so I try every day to get better for both of us."

through the K-State campus. Daudet said the walk will end at about 12:30 p.m.

Becki Bohnenblust, co-chairwoman for the Manhattan walk, said it is the branch's goal this year to involve a greater percentage of the community. She said the branch already has begun to accomplish that goal.

"In the past, we have had approximately 150 participants," she said. "We raised $6,000. This year, as of Wednesday, we had 272 people signed up, and our goal is $12,000."

Domino's Pizza, Subway, Subs 'N Such and Pepsi-Cola have agreed to donate food and drink for all participants in the walk. Area businesses such as Vista Drive In, Little Apple Brewery Co. and Burnett Automotive donated nearly 100 door prizes for participants as well. Members of Alpha Delta Pi sorority have helped to organize the event.

In addition to door prizes, awards will be given to walkers who raise the most amount of money. Those who raise $100 receive an MS Walk T-shirt, and the prizes increase as the amount of money raised increases.

Daudet said she encourages members of the community to participate in the walk.

"There is no minimum pledge amount," she said. "We usually suggest a minimum of $25, though.

Daudet said because the MS Society does not receive any United Way funding, Saturday's walk is particularly important to the organization.

"This is one of two primary events that we do," she said. "We are funded by money from special events like this."

stakes. The win was in the Hollywood Futurity, and the seconds were in the Champagne and Breeders Cup Juvenile

The Breeders' Cup Juvenile was run at Churchill Downs Nov. 4, and Point Given closed from far back and lost by a nose to 2-year-old champion Macho Uno, who is not in the Derby. Baffert and the prince then decided on only two pre-Derby starts for Point Given as a 3year-old, with the first in March.

To guard against Point Given who stands 17 hands and weighs about 1,250 pounds - from putting on excess weight, Baffert sent him out to win the Hollywood Futurity in which he scored a one-length win over Millennium Wind on Dec. 16.

"The goal is to have your horse peak on Derby day," Stevens said. "If some of these horses have peaked or not, I don't know. I'm comfortable with what I'm setting on."

Congaree, owned by Robert and Janice McNair, made his debut with a sixth-place finish in a maiden race Sept. 10 at Del Mar, then had the knee surgery.

The son of the highly hyped Arazi, who finished eighth in the 1992 Derby, made his 3-year-old debut with a victory in a maiden race Feb. 28. He then won an allowance race before his impressive 2 3/4-length victory over Monarchos in the Wood Memorial.

Free trade, Zedillo said, gives people hope, and he recalled a little girl by the name of Rosa who had found a job after a moderately good educational background.

"I remember her saying with enormous self-esteem that thanks to the job, she was helping her father to provide for the support of the family and that her younger sister and brother were getting a good education," Zedillo said.

However, he said, further efforts are needed to help those in the world living in poverty.

"Let us admit that in many countries, the poorest ones in our world, good domestic polices and access to world markets will not be sufficient to let people jump the dividing line," he said.

After the speech, Zedillo mingled and had his picture taken with members of K-State's community. A group of people of varying ethnic backgrounds, but who appeared to have Hispanic descent, met and had their pictures taken with Zedillo.

At one point, a crowd surrounded Zedillo, making it difficult for amateur photographers in the audience to take his picture. Regardless, it seemed to be a great opportunity for the crowd and one they enjoyed.

"It was a really good speech, and an honor to get to see him." said Maygaly Razo, sophomore in secondary education and bilingual

Residents of Jardine Terrace Apartments will gather to celebrate the end of the semester from 5 to 7 p.m. Saturday at the Frith Community Center.

Stephanie Bannister, coordinator for the lardine complex, said this is the second year for the Jardine staff to put on the event for its residents. Any Jardine resident can attend for free.

"Last year, the staff just decided we wanted a special event," she said.

Bannister said this is a great time for residents to get together and meet new people. The staff also plans on having an event each year at the beginning of the fall semester. she said. This weekend, the staff is planning on around 300 people attending, she said.

Bannister said the Last Blast event will have food and games for people of all ages. The games will consist of tug-of-war and kickball.

A big event for the children this year will be the inflatable jumping castle. The turnout for the children activities and games usually is very high, Bannister said.

Todd Fertig, Jardine staff member, said the staff is hoping the weather is nice because most of the events they have planned take place outside. In case of bad weather, Fertig said the staff is coming up. with alternative plans since there is usually such a high turnout.

Since there are so many people living in the apartments. Fertig said the beginning and ending school year events provide a rare chance for adults and children to meet new friends and socialize.

Ujwala Vaidya, former resident and staff member of Jardine, said the staff works hard on this event because they know how much it means for the residents.

Vaidya said she enjoyed attending the event as a resident. and she now is one of the staff members helping to put on the She said staff members split up to work on whatever part of the planning they feel they can assist with. Vaidya said she will be helping with the children's jumping castle.

The staff is pleased that the event is so popular with the residents, and they keep working to improve on the event each time, she said.

Jardine residents to celebrate U.S. retracts statement to cut off contact with China

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The Pentagon further complicated an already tense relationship with China by first stating that Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld had suspended all contacts with the Chinese military and then retracting the statement, which it called a misunderstanding.

On Monday, an official memorandum from Rumsfeld's office to senior military and civilian officials in the Pentagon said he had directed the suspension of all Department of Defense programs, contacts and activities with the People's Republic of China until further notice.

Hours after the memo leaked Wednesday and was reported worldwide by U.S. news organizations, a spokesman for Rumsfeld, Rear Adm, Craig Quigley, said the memo was a mistake. In the interim, Quigley and other officials had struggled to explain the move, which also appeared to catch the White House by surprise.

Upon hearing about Rumsfeld's memo, White House officials called the Pentagon and said it sounds inconsistent with the secretary's policy, White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said.

The spokesman would not reveal which officials, or how commencement. Last spring, the Graduate School had the highest number of graduates since the school has been keeping records, and this year's numbers are pretty close to last year's.

The College of Arts and Sciences has about the same number of graduates as last spring. Complaints were made about last spring's commencement running over the time limit.

"Our time was cut, and therefore we were given less time; rather than running over the limit," Joanne Ringle, assistant transcript specialist, said.

Last spring's commencement started at 8:30 a.m. in Bramlage Coliseum, and the College of Education's commencement was scheduled for 10:30 a.m.ran directly after. This spring, the College of Education will begin at 11 a.m. to allow more time for the Arts and Sciences ceremony.

"It was changed back, so we will be right on time - perfectly on time," Ringle said.

So far, 789 students have applied for graduation from Arts and Sciences.

"We expect 90 to 95 percent of those applications to be approved," Ringle said.

every student.

Graduating from college within four years is not always possible for Jason Butler, senior in mathematics, has switched his major four times and will graduate after 4 1/2 vears at K-State.

"I started out in engineering, then I was in kinesiology for a semester, next was secondary education with an emphasis in math. And now I am in mathematics," Butler said.

"One nice thing about my situation is. I didn't lose a lot of hours when switching my majors," he said. "A lot of the general education courses carried over, so I was not behind.

Debra Webb, undergraduate program secretary for mathematics, said it generally takes students four years to earn their undergraduate degree in mathematics.

You always have your extreme cases. We had a student who graduated with four different degrees in four years and maintained a 4.0 grade point average," she said.

The amount of time it takes students depends on their personal situations, Webb said.

"Students who double major in mathematics and computer engineering, for example, take about five years," Webb said.

Robert Corum, department head of modern languages, said the majority of students are able to graduate in four years.

"We don't pile on the course work in modern languages. It is a reasonable program," Corum. said.

Students wanting to graduate in four years must come to college with at least two years of modern language experience from high school. Corum said.

The modern language department has students who study abroad as well. Students often are gone for a semester to a year, Corum said.

James Ewing, senior in chemical engineering, will graduate with an undergraduate degree in four and a

"I average about 16 hours per semester to graduate within four and a half years," Ewing said.

"Classes are not hard to get into, but many classes are offered only once a year. So if you miss a class, you have to wait until the next year, which can put you behind," Ewing

Larry Glasgow, professor and student adviser for chemical engineering, said it is possible, but extremely difficult for chemical engineering students to graduate in

"Students wanting to graduate in four years with an undergraduate degree in chemical engineering have to take a big load of classes each semester," he said.

The average student is able to graduate with an undergraduate degree in nine or 10 semesters. Glasgow said.

Graduates, families can attend Union's commencement buffet

Union Ballroom will offer annual buffet from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Sunday.

By STEFANIE HOWARD Kansas State Collegian

Instead of waiting in long lines at local restaurants after graduation, people can attend the K-State Student Union's 25th Annual Commencement Buffet on Sunday.

The buffet will be from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m in the Union Ballroom.

Cindie Snyder, marketing and promotions manager for the Union, said tickets still are avail-

"The ballroom can seat 800 people, so we have some room still available," Snyder said,

Tickets for children 4 and under are free, children 5 to 12 can eat for $7.50 and adults tickets are $12.95.

Checks and MasterCard, Visa. American Express or Discover are accepted.

Tickets purchased before Monday will be mailed to students, but tickets can be purchased until Thursday. Snyder said.

Reservations are required and those who have questions or who are interested may call 532-

Paul Stolle, director of Union Dining Services, said tickets purchased after Monday can be picked up at the director's office on the second floor of the Union.

We are expecting about 450 to 500 people, which is around the same amount each year." Stolle said.

The menu for the buffet includes herb-crusted chicken picatta in a lemon caper butter sauce, bow-tie pasta with sun dried tomato and basil sauce, carved cajun seasoned top round of beef, along with a deluxe salad bar, homemade dessert bar and K-State crown and multi-grain

Along with the commencement buffet, students also are able to have their receptions at Jennifer Colon, reservations secretary at the Union Director's office, said a few rooms still are available.

"The rooms are free to the students. Those who are interested need to contact the director's office for more information," Colon said.

It is a good opportunity to have students' family and friends who are here for graduation have the opportunity to come on campus and see where they have gone to school and have a nice meal as well, Snyder said.

"The buffet is a great oncampus dining experience, and students and their families are able to avoid long lines at other

College graduates to leave school with loans, debt

By ALISON VRTISKA

Kansas State Collegian

On commencement day, K-State graduates will walk away with a diploma and an average debt of $15,848, said Larry Moeder, director of admissions and student financial assistance.

Moeder said most students don't wait until they graduate to start worrying about the debt, but he said it is a small amount to pay for a lifetime investment.

"Fifteen thousand dollars will buy you a car," Moeder said. "How long will that car last compared to how long your education will last? And the education will probably allow you to make much more money than you will pay for the education. The benefits far outweigh the cost.

K-State uses Federal Direct Student Loans, which is a service of the U.S. Department of Education. For government subsidized loans, the interest is paid while students are in college.

Since loan repayment doesn't begin until after a student has stopped being at least a part time student for six months, graduate students are able to finance their entire education, meaning they end up with an even larger debt when they finish.

"Luckily, I'll be starting a job right after I graduate," Bruce Oberle, graduate student in accounting, said. "But it still feels like I'll be paying it off forever.'

The U.S. Department of Education offers exit counseling to make students aware of loan repayment options and works with students to put them into the best of four payment programs.

"In some cases, it can take longer than 10 years to repay the loan.

KSU offers ways to stay involved

Renz also said there are opportunities for graduates to get involved with student recruitment by doing things like volunteering to work at college nights and serving as mentors.

She said it is especially important that recent graduates get involved because they can better relate to high school students.

Whatever the capacity, Alicia Addison, senior in agriculture economics and former president of Student Alumni Board, said she would encourage students who are graduating to continue being active as alumni.

"It's important to stay involved because there's a spirit at K-State that you should want to stay connected with," she said.

She said she encourages graduates to get involved with clubs or volunteer to help with recruiting, but she said it is also important that they continue to come back to watch football games and become involved with things that were important to them while they were in school.

Addison said it has been neat for her to see the excitement of those alumni she's worked with who have made the effort to continue being involved with K-State. "Talking to them makes you want to stay involved," she said.

"They get so excited when they talk about their experiences at K-State, and it's awesome to see the spirit of pride they still have for our university."

Last year of college offers new opportunities, adventures

I recently played Lucifer in a scene in my acting class.

Now, most people who know me were amused when I told them I was playing the most evil creature in the universe - one of my friends even looked at me strangely and said he wouldn't have cast me in that part. The rest of my friends were just amused, though, to hear that I was in an acting class during my last semester at K-State, not even for credit - for fun. I have never taken an acting class in my life. I have spent the last four years hiding in Kedzie Hall, taking my required journalism classes and uninteresting lecture classes where I can hide among the other 200 people in the room.

But this semester, I was determined to do something different. I wanted a semester where I could take classes that interested and challenged me. I took 15 hours this semester when I only needed nine.

I found myself excited to go to classes I wasn't required to take.

One of my friends always told me I should spice up my schedule with at least one class that doesn't count toward anything, and while 1 attempted to make an effort at it, it wasn't until this semester that I actually took his advice to heart.

It was fun to look through the line schedule and pick out classes I always had wanted to take. I found it hard to narrow down my choices, but I thought I would be considered more nuts if I took more than 15 hours my last semester

BECKY WILSON / Collegian

These new classes opened me up to other areas of the campus. I started going to plays because of my acting class, and now, looking > back, I regret never taking the time to go to any before. it all this

I wanted to do semester - my last real semester K-State. I walked in the Martin Luther King Walk, I spent a Friday night in the Union bowling alley instead of Aggieville, I and enjoying these last months spoke with international students in the English Language Program and lattended Midnight Madness in the Purple Masque Theatre, I even used the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

There is a need to do something daring and different your last semester at K-State, and instead of getting a tattoo or strange piercing, I chose to experience K-State. This sounds corny, I know, like a campaign geared toward recruiting new students. However, this has been the best semester of my college career.

I can leave here with less regret that I didn't do that or this. I packed it all in.

> I also managed to work in some lazy senior time skipping class in the afternoon to watch a movie or just hang out.

> I have more friends out in the real world now, and they are continuously telling me that college is the best time of your life. 1 believe that, This semester was about making the most of that time - shucking all my responsibilities outside of classes with my friends.

So my advice to all those underclassmen is take your time - enroll in a class you never had the guts to enroll in before, attend a K-Statesponsored event on campus or one day just break from your normal routine and do something new.

I think Ferris Bueller said it best

- "Life moves pretty fast, and if you don't stop and look around once in a while you might miss something."

Career and

By CORBIN H. CRABLE Kansas State Collegian

The clock is ticking down to graduation, and many graduating seniors have Career and Employment Services to thank for their recent job offers.

CES, located in Holtz Hall, offers many services for those anxious to enter the work force. Students can attend CES-sponsored workshops, get a résumé critique, post their résumé and information online for potential employers to see and conduct on-campus interviews with those employers, among Tracey Fraser, director of CES, said seniors who work with CES are at an advantage.

"We get a lot of feedback from recent graduates and employers who tell us that K-State graduates are very marketable," she said. "Our graduates have strong academic skills, we have a great faculty, and employers continue to define K-State graduates as having a strong work ethic."

Wayne Nelson is one of many graduating located in Holtz seniors who has Hall. For more benefited from what CES has to offer. Nelson, call 532-6506 senior in civil engineering, has used CES' services for three years, and he recently was offered a job with the engineering firm the Larkin said CES has helped him in his quest to find employment after graduation.

Group in Kansas City, Mo. Nelson

"I've utilized their services quite a bit," Nelson said. "I've attended their workshops, had their personnel critique my résumé, and I've bounced questions off of them.

"The most beneficial part about CES, I've found, is the career fair.

Fraser said CES assists all students, not just graduating seniors, at every level of their job

"There are some people who clearly are starting their job search process," she said

"A lot of people start here when they're freshmen, and they continue to explore their options until graduation.

Another graduating senior who has used the services of CES is David Harder, senior in agricultural business. Harder has used CES for two years, and he was offered a job at Archer Daniels Midland, an agricultural food processor.

Harder said he has appreciated the easy access to employers that CES offers.

"I've found CES to be very helpful," Harder said. "They did a good job of hooking me up with companies that interested me. It made things easier because I did most of my interviews on campus."

Lack of money will not hinder happiness

I've spent 23 years working for this.

But the question is, have I been working toward my college graduation, which will occur in just a few days, or have I been working toward amassing a monstrous debt, also known as student loans, car payments, bills, rent and so on?

I probably don't have to say which one I'm more excited

But the money situation is a serious concern.

In a couple weeks, I will be starting a new job. Believe me, I'm grateful for a place of employment, but the amount I will make is a poor excuse for a salary.

Money will be very tight for quite a while. Actually, as a journalist, money could be tight for the rest of my life.

So what has been the common phrase I've heard from people lately? Let's all say it together. Welcome to the real world.

First of all. I hate that cliche. I could go the rest of my life without hearing that again and die a happy woman.

Second, the real world shouldn't leave me feeling like I'd been hit by a Mack truck.

I was cruising along just fine until one day, bam, I'm in some serious debt. There was no easing into it. There were no warnings. It all just happened at once.

The problem is, I won't receive my first paycheck for at least another month.

I have had to clean out my checking account, empty my pockets and take the last few pennies from under the seat of my car in order to meet my monthly

But I'm not going to let a little thing like money stop me from enjoying the fact that I finally am graduating. It definitely has been worth the five years of seemingly never-ending homework, tests and classes.

In a couple weeks, I will be starting a new life, complete with a job I like and a place to live in a town I love.

I'll be changing routines, meeting new people and doing different things. Who wouldn't be excited?

I'm not saying I won't miss certain aspects of college life. I will miss friends, late nights, Aggieville and even the Collegian (that last one could be cause for concern).

But my life after graduation will be new and different, and I'm ready for a change.

I am ecstatic about this point in

But I have to be honest. I didn't get to this point by myself. I had a lot of help from teachers, neighbors, acquaintances and even strangers.

But most importantly, I owe so much to my friends and family. You know who you are

You always have been there and will continue to be there to encourage, help and support me. You have helped shape who I've you, so I'll just offer to buy you a beer after I graduate. But on my

Long lines, crowds await those planning to eat at restaurants

By ERICA COURTRIGHT Kansas State Collegian

Those people planning to dine out in Manhattan to celebrate graduation need to bring along their

"Especially if you come in large groups, be prepared to wait," said Deric Davin, assistant manager of Sirloin Stockade.

Managers and supervisors of area restaurants expect increased traffic through their restaurants during K-State's upcoming graduation ceremonies. And with Mother's Day falling on Sunday, managers expect the number of people dining out to be pretty large. "We're definitely expecting large crowds because of both graduation and Mother's Day," Davin said.

Kyle Harbaugh, a supervisor at Carlos O'Kelly's, said he had similar expectations for crowds at his

"We get a lot of people through here that time of year, especially large parties of 10 to 15 people," he said. "We try to accommodate as many people as possible."

To accommodate the larger crowds, managers and supervisors said they plan to have extra supplies on hand. Harbaugh said Carlos O'Kelly's will have its maximum number of employees.

Roger McAllister, a manager at Little Apple Brewing Co., said his restaurant will have extra hosts and staff specifically assigned to the banquet room. He said the restaurant sees an increase in the number of reservations for large parties.

However, no matter how large or small the dining party is, managers and supervisors advise that people planning to dine-out plan ahead.

"Call to see about reservations,"

Harbaugh said. "Ask about the typical wait time, and if necessary, ask if the restaurant has room to seat large parties." Besides planning to wait and planning ahead, McAllister said he thought people's best bet will be to arrive early. "With the number of people dining out, that's the only way you can hope to get good seats," he said.

D-Day veteran constructs first memorial to honor soldiers

Kansas State Collegest

"Soldiers, Sailors and Airmen of the Allied Expeditionary Force; You are about to embark upon the Great Crusade, toward which we have striven these many months. The eyes of the world are upon you. The hope and prayers of the liberty-loving people everywhere are with you...

-Abilene Kan., native General Dwight D. Eisenhower. JUNE 6, 1944.

It was the largest air, land and sea invasion ever undertaken, including over 5,000 ships, 10,000 airplanes, and 250,000 service men and women.

Many of them not yet 20-years-old unloaded themselves into deep water . carrying eighty pounds of equipment as they faced a distance of over 200 yards of treacherous beach before any type of protection could be found.

"As our boat touched sand and the ramp went down, I became a visitor to hell," said Private Charles Neighbor, 116th Infantry Regiment, 29th Infantry Division Omaha Beach.

When it was over, 6,603 Americans were dead. Yet through all of that, they had won.

June 6, 1944. D-Day forever changed the course of not only U.S. history, but world history. Yet, in the United States there has never been a National Memorial to D-Day.

Until now. Fifty-seven years later people from the United States and around the world will be able to visit a monument that will serve as a permanent tribute to the Allied Forces on D-Day.

THE DECISION TO MAKE THE MEMORIAL

In 1987, D-Day veteran John Robert Slaughter sadly commented, "Today, we have no gathering place, no meeting hall, no memorial, where our country can collect its memories and the lessons we learned from D-Day."

Slaughter then made up his mind to change that by becoming the chairman of the board of the National D-Day Memorial

"When the monument is finally on that hill in Bedford and we cut the ribbon, it will be tremendous," Slaughter said. "I will feel relief that finally something has been done for the boys who didn't make it home and that will preserve the memories and the history of D-Day."

Ground-breaking for the monument area was held on Nov. 11, 1997.

On May 29, 2000, the Foundation held an on-site memorial ceremony to celebrate the 56th anniversary of D-Day to present the Overlord Arch and Upper Victory Plaza.

he Beatles were in Manhattan on last. Saturday night. Well, not really.

Yesterday, a Beatles tribute band that tours the world, made an appearance at Manhattan City Park, entertaining concert-goers with a two-hour show that included covers of songs such as "I Wanna Hold Your Hand," "Can't Buy Me Love," "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds" and "Yellow Submarine."

Don Bellezo, Davey Justice, Monte Mann and Dick Cunico dressed, sang and acted as John Lennon, Paul McCartney, George Harrison and Ringo Starr, respectively, did in the '60s.

In the first set, the four men performed songs from 1964-1966 with mop top hair, Beatles boots and black suits and ties like the original band wore on the Ed Sullivan show in 1964.

As darkness fell on the crowd, the band reappeared after a 20-minute break wearing mustaches and colorful satin suits from the psychedelic era of peace and love in 1967.

Throughout the show, children who weren't alive when the original Beatles performed, grabbed hands and twisted along to the tunes as others gathered near the stage to dance to the Many concert-goers mouthed the words or sang along out loud.

Saturday kicked off the 25th year of Arts in the Park, a series of free concerts featuring mostly local acts. Several different musical talents will perform on weekends throughout the summer including Ruskabank, Egomaniacs and Clay Davidson.

Melanie Godsey, recreation supervisor, said it was not that difficult to snag the four men to perform because Arts in the Park has a good reputation.

"It's a nice, relaxing atmosphere for the bands and we always get really good crowds," Godsey

"It's usually a quality show and we have good equipment.

Don Hardwick, a Manhattan resident, said his favorite part of the concert was the music and remembering back to the '60s. "My wife wanted to come so I brought her," Hardwick said. "I like the music, but I'm not a big fan like she is."

Yesterday's members said they were singing their last song for the night when they performed "Revolution." They then sang three more for the encore before ending with "Hey Jude."

Rebecca Arata, who will be a freshman at Columbia University in fall 2001, said that hearing "Revolution" was her favorite part of the concert, and that overall she found the concert interesting.

Matt Stamey/Collegian

"Being a big Beatles fan, I know a lot of Beatles trivia," she said. "It was interesting to hear their version of the recordings."

Hardwick said he was happy the band performed the last three songs since "Hey Jude" ranks as his favorite Beatles tune

Even though the four Beatles impersonators perform together all over the world, they are originally from different parts of the country. Mann, on lead guitar and vocals, is originally from Houston and Cunico, on drums and vocals, is originally from Colorado Springs, Colo.

Justice, of Chicago, on bass guitar and lead vocals, has won awards for McCartney soundand look-alike competitions, while Bellezo, of Los Angeles, on rhythm guitar and lead vocals, has won awards for Lennon sound-alike compe-

Wildcat 91.9 off the air for week of repairs

BY JAMIE BARRETT

K-State's student operated radio station is off the air this week in order to do equipment checks and repair some lightening damage.

KSDB-FM 91.9 went off the air at 10:15 a.m. Monday, and will resume airing again on June 8. Candy Walton, station manager for the Wildcar 91.9, said the station has not purposely shut down the radio station for at least three years. Walton said the time off the air will be spent doing checks on their equipment, which may have been damaged by lightening when a tower was struck a month ago.

Matt Jolly, program director for the Wildcat 91.9, said they decided to shut down the station in the summer because of the low listenership.

summer when most all the students are gone," Jolly said. "We needed to do this because if we don't fix the problems we have now we could have much bigger problems in the Jolly said the Wildcat 91.9's equipment is fairly old and with a proposed move to the K-State Student Union, the station may be able to attain newer equipment.

"The older this kind of equipment gets the harder it is to bring it back from the dead," he said. "We are still hoping we can move to the Union, but we will still need to get some SGA approval in the fall."

Jolly said when the station begins airing again, there will be not changes in format.

Overall cancer rates down since 1990s

BY PAUL RECER The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Rates for cancer cases and deaths went down in the 1990s, led by declines for prostate, lung and colon cancer, according to combined government and private studies. More breast cancer cases were detected, apparently because of aggressive screening.

"This is an optimistic report because overall cancer rates are tending toward a decline," said Holly Howe, one of the authors of a report appearing Wednesday in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute.

The big four killer cancers - breast, prostate; lung and colon-rectum - accounted for 52.7 percent of the 1998 cancer deaths in the U.S., the study found. These diseases also accounted for 55.9 percent of all new cancers.

Death rates for eight of the top 10 cancers were all level or declining. The exceptions were the death rates for breast cancer and melanoma, both of which increased.

Howe, a researcher with the North American Association of Central Cancer Registries, said prostate cancer rates have fallen dramatically, by about a third over six years, while rates for lung and colon-rectum cancers either decreased slightly or stabilized.

The study compares the rate of cancer incidence and death in the United States from 1992 to 1998 with similar statistics from earlier years. It is the result of combined data and analysis from the National Cancer Institute, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the American Cancer Society and the NAACCR.

"This welcome news on declining rates underscores the incredible progress we've made against cancer, but it also reminds us that our fight is far from over," Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson said.

While cancer deaths declined across the whole popula-

K-State successful in cow cloning

BY JAMIE BARRETT

Kansas State Collegian

She is only a little over two months old and is still being bottle fed, but Chloe the calf has drawn much attention since her birth on March 28.

Chloe is the first calf at K-State's purebred beef research unit to be successfully cloned. After much effort and several failed attempts to clone a calf, Chloe was cloned through the efforts of K-State Research and Extension and the small, Manhattan based company CyAgra.

Audy Spell, director of operations for CyAgra, said they worked with K-State for many months on the project, both ends providing a specialty that was needed for the project.

"K-State provided us a specialty we did not have but needed to do such a project," Spell said. "We are gaining valuable information from being involved with the project."

Chloe is an exact replica of her mother, one of the most reproductive cows at the research unit. After 18 months of research and work, K-State and CyAgra were able to clone the calf from the a tissue sample from the ear of her genetic mother.

The staff at the unit hope that Chloe will grow normally so they can put her in their breeding program just like any other cow.

Animal scientist David Grieger and colleague Duane Davis conducted the research project, working closely with CyAgra. Chloe was the end result of 96 embryos implanted into 46 recipient cows. Right now, K-State is not engaged in any other projects with CyAgra. but hopes to be in the future. No other cloned pregnancies are underway at this point.

"We had this one project with them that went very well," Grieger said. "They helped us with what we couldn't do."

The long process K-State went through to clone the calf was not abnormal. Statistics state that only 10-20 percent of cloned pregnancies make it to full term. Cloned cattle have a 5-10 percent birth rate while 60 percent of non-cloned embryo transfers are successful.

Troy Marple, animal scientist and director of K-State's purebred beef research unit, said Chloe the Clone, as she was nicknamed, is being treated like any other calf at "Right now she is still being bottle fed," Marple said. "She does not have a mother so we are going to try to wean her sometime soon.

Although she was born on March 28, the calf was only known to a few staff members an students till the end of May. Spell said K-State decided not to announce her birth right away in order to make sure the calf would survive.

"We respected the universities decision to wait on announcing the call," Spell said, "They wanted to make sure everything with the calf went normally.

Marple said Chloe is being treated just like a normal bucket calf, but gets special attention because of her fame.

"I would be lying if I said we did not watch her more than any other calf," Marple said. "She does get some special attention."

Marple said Chloe seems to be doing well and will hopefully develop just as any other calf would, but with the process of cloning, it is difficult to know when you are out of the danger period.

"Since the cloning process is so complicated, it is difficult to know when she is out of the danger period," Marple said. "She spent the first two months of her life at the vet school and she seems to be developing fine.

In the meantime, Chloe is being visited often and stays in a special pen near the research office. Despite all of her fame, she just recently acquired her new name.

"We did not name her for a long time," Marple said. "She did have a professional name, but finally David Grieger's children gave her the nickname of Chloe the Clone. It seems to be a suitable name."

Former foundation administrator found dead in Texas home

BY DAN SMITH

Kansas State Collegion

Former K-State Foundation administrator Mark Moore, 48, was found dead on May 23 in Denton County, Texas of several gunshot wounds to the head.

Moore played a key role in the university's fund raising projects from 1979 until his departure in 1996.

The former vice president for capital campaigns and planned giving at K-State was found along with Sylvia Huffman Hunt, 45, of Corinth, Texas. The victims' bodies were discovered by Moore's neighbor early on the morning of May 24 after Moore's absence at work on Monday raised suspicions about his whereabouts, police said.

Moore had since moved on to take a position as the University of North Texas' vice president for development in 1996 after 17 years at K-

Guy Hellebust, current K-State Foundation president, remembers Moore's decision to move away from K-State.

"He saw it as an opportunity to expand and grow," Hellebust said. Thanks in large part to Moore's efforts, UNT was selected for the Circle of Excellence in Educational of Advancement and Support of Education in 2000. As vice president, Moore helped to increase the schools' financial gifts from $7 million during the 1997-1998 school year to just over $10 million during the 1998-1999 period.

The development office has made gigantic strides and well deserves this award and recognition," said Bill Hunt, UNT Foundation board member and College of Business Administration advisory committee chair, in June 2000.

This achievement is evidence of a full-fledged professional fundraising organization under the leadership of Mark Moore," he said. "He has recruited top-flight development officers and has laid the foundation for a successful fundraising effort."

The more-than 40 percent " increase in contributions during that period were evidence of what Hellebust called Moore's strongest professional attribute.

"He had tremendous skills and he was very bright," he said. "He was about trust and integrity, and he could always get people interested in getting involved in what he was asking them to do.

"Everybody was surprised," Hellebust said, "shocked almost beyond belief that someone that you know has died."

Services for Moore were held in Denton, Texas at UNT's Recital Hall. on May 25 before his burial in Kansas. He is survived by his wife, Christine, of Manhattan.

Sex Education?

Parents, not MTV, should be responsible for educating children about sex, consequences

We live in a society that is dominated by sex.

In the Sunday's edition of USA Today there was a rather humorous article on "freak dancing" in regards to high schools now starting policies restricting various dance moves. Policies include not grabbing ones ankles when dancing. Wow. What are they still doing in high school with talent like that?

In the article it stated that parents were also concerned because they believe that teenage girls were actually becoming pregnant on the dance floor at high school dances. I can just see a high school girl onvincing her parents that she was an expectant mother because of something that happened in the middle of everyone at a high school dance. I think a more believable scenario would involve a dance that often occurs on country roads, or maybe its just that they have advanced to more daring moves besides the Roger Rabbit.

According to a story from Scripps Howard News Service it is not unusual for doctors to see 12-year-olds in regards to taking a pregnancy test on a daily basis. Dr. Aughey, a medical director interviewed in the story said he even had a client whold had intercourse at age 10, her first abortion at 11 and had 16 sex partners by the age of 13.

The story also hinted that MTV has been dubbed the leading form of sex education for teens and is to blame

The report also stated that blame also resides with Britney Spears posters, spaghetti-strap T-shirts and testosterone-driven rap lyrics.

I am sure there are countless people who decided to lose their virginity after seeing a Britney poster, the numbers are even higher for posters that have 98 degrees or N'SYNC on them. Thank goodness the late John Denver is not on any posters because that would triple teen pregnancy rates I bet.

In all seriousness the "blame" should not reside entirely on MTV. Part of the problem is parents do not talk to their kids, or more importantly, parents don't know how to talk to their kids about sex.

When my parents spoke to me about sex the statements that stood out were. "The love gun doesn't shoot blanks, Erin' and there was a few references to cows and

That was the sweetness portion of a rather difficult

Next came the unexpected. Hearned a story about my aint who became pregnant when she was in high school. She made the decision to give her baby up for

There suddenly seemed to be truth behind the story about the cows and milk. The Vitamin D scenario could be a serious thing. Those non-blanks from the love guncould change my life:

And even though the conversation I had with my parents about sex was not the most comfortable. I appreciated the fact that they tried to talk to me about it

In a survey, 72 percent of the mothers said they had talked with their teens about sex, but only 45 percent of their teens said there had been such a conversation according to the Sexuality Information and Education

So maybe instead of forcing the blame on MTV we should instead focus on ways that parents can talk to their kids about sex.

Aughey said parents need to explain their hopes and desires for their children. For instance, parents need to tell their children that they wish for them to be abstinent until marriage or that they wait until they are a certain age or in a loving, committed relationship.

I had a friend whose mom would say that premarital sex is not acceptable and make very negative comments about those who have sex before marriage and then would ask her in the next sentence if she was having sex. So how things are said are just as important, if not more important, than what is actually being said.

McCarthy was a guest on the TV show.

she has been doing for Candle's in regards to safe sex. McCarthy said that she was trying the approach of not telling kids they should not have sex, but instead informing them that they need to protect themselves when they do. This is an approach that needs to be reinforced in our society. It is a shame that children are having sex without realizing the consequences, thus the maturity of their actions. But MTV is not to blame.

Some parents worry that if they talk about sex it will put the idea into their childrens heads. However, by not talking about it, it instead allows country roads to be the

PE should encourage life-long health So the latest cultural war is over the game of dodge ball. A number of school districts are planning to remove it from their physical education curriculum. In this time of Columbine, it is felt by some that pelting one's fellow classmates as hard as one can with a ball is a promotion of aggressive behavior.

Perhaps it does. Social conservatives think not. It is, after all, just a game. However, some children do take it too seriously. As with any population of people, there are always a segment that are more aggressive than others. More likely than not, for these small number of aggressively predisposed children, dodge ball is not a promotion of aggressive behavior, but a reinforcement.

Should dodge hall be eliminated because of a few behaviorally maladjusted kids? That's something for those whose understanding of child psychology far exceeds my own to debate.

Regardless of the dodge ball. these aggressively oriented children need to be paid special attention in order to channel this behavior into a form that is more socially acceptable.

Then there's the tired debate over the politics of feelings. There exists a small group of adults who are against any competitive sport. which results in there, being winners and losers. Our schools are not in the business of making some children who lose feel bad.

The social conservative criticism of this is that in the real world there are always winners and losers. Instead of sheltering our children from this, they need to learn the reality of it.

This criticism is well made and applies to the moderately athletic children who sometimes win and other times lose. The point is lost, however, on the athletically disin-clined kids who always lose. These kids views their athletic situation as hopeless and that their purpose in gym is to be fodder for the athletically gifted children who always win.

For those children slow in reading or math, there exists special help. These kids recognize that the system cares and has a desire to help them with their learning difficulties. But where is the special help for those slow in running?

We, as a society, shelter our children from lots of things. It's hypocritical that the social conserto the ideas to which children are exposed due to their possible harmful effects, even to the expense of infringing on other people's rights of expression or viewing choice, are the same conservatives that lack any empathy for the children who are constantly being harmed by the demoralizing effects of forever loosing on the field of play.

But the real problem with dodge ball is that it's a dumb game. The idea behind physical education is to get the kids running around so they can

The climination of dodge ball or even other competitive sports from PE is not an elimination of PE (unless the conservatives don't want to pay their share of taxes for greater good of the society and thus The social conservative criticism of this is that in the real world there are always winners and losers. Instead of sheltering our children from this, they need to learn the reality of it.

PE is eliminated due to a lack of school funds). The "E"in PE stands for education and education should be of use later on in life. Not many people still play dodge ball as adults. Only a small percentage of adults play any competitive sport recreationally.

But it is important to exercise throughout one's whole life. A number of schools are replacing competitive sports with aerobics, weight training or other physical activities that most people can follow after graduation.

These activities keep all kids active through the entire class period, even the slow, fat kids who need the exercise the most. Moreover, this kind of PE instills the healthy habits not learned through dodge ball that will be important long into adulthood.

Handcuffed suspect steals police car

A suspected car thief handcuffed in the back seat of a Wichita police car apparently squeezed through a divider separating him from the front seat and stole the police cruiser.

The suspect led police Monday on back-to-back car chases through east Wichita, at one point driving through front yards and even killing a deer that darted into his path, police said.

"He was handcuffed behind his back, but he somehow worked his hands around to the front of his body," said police spokeswoman Janet Johnson, "and I don't know how he fit through that opening. It must have been a tight fit."

The first chase started when a patrol car began pursuing a car that had been reported stolen.

The driver eventually lost control of his car. Officers handcuffed him and purhim in the back sear of the patrol car. While the officer was outside the car talking to a supervisor, the slimly-built man apparently found a way to get his hands to his front. He then wriggled through a 12-by-12 inch window in the Plexiglas divider separating the front and back seats.

The man again led police through east Wichita neighborhoods. When he drove onto a dead end street, he passed pursuing officers by driving on from lawns, Johnson said.

When he was stopped, the man was taken directly to the police station.

"It seems like we just get done loading rail cars and somebody is on the phone saying, 'Send us more,"' said Luke Reichenberger, operations coordinator at the High Plains Corp. plant in Colwich, which produces about 20 million gallons of ethanol a Ethanol is made by fermenting grain and distilling the alcohol. It can be produced from almost anything with starch content. The Colwich plant is one of four ethanol plants in Kansas. Others are in Leoti, Garden City and Atchison, and collectively they produce about 50 million gallons

A fifth plant will have a 25-milliongallon capacity when it comes online in November in Russell, and a group of investors is beginning plans for a sixth plant in Garnett.

Some Kansas taxpayers who made their 1998 payment on time got notices that they owe penalties and

The glitch affects payments made on April 15, 1999, for the 1998 tax year. Computers at the Kansas Department of Revenue apparently labeled some of the payments as late, according to department spokesman Scott Holeman.

The computer was programmed to read 104 days after the start of the year, Holeman said. April 15 was the Holeman thought a batch of 3,000 penalty and interest letters were sent for the 1998 tax year, but he didn't know how many were triggered by the April 15 mix up. About 1.5 million Kansas income tax returns are filed each year.

Guy Gann, owner of Hutchinson Income Tax and Financial Services says he asked the revenue department a month ago about the letters. The e-mail he got in response said it was a "system problem," according to a copy of the e-mail that Gann showed The Unitchinson News.

Gann said about 30 of his clients got letters over the past year alleging late payments, although their taxes were paid on time. He says he handles about 450 tax returns per year.

Crisis Center reaches out to domestic violence victims

BY ERIN SCHNEWEIS

Kansas State Collegian

Last year on average The Crisis Center, Inc. served 219 victims, answered 167 crisis calls and provided shelter for 25 people per Judy Davis, executive director for The Crisis Center, Inc., said the center was officially incor-MORE INFO? Call the 24hour hotline at porated in 1981 and is a nonprofit organization that assists with sexual and domestic violence in Clay, Geary, Marshall, Pottawatomie and Riley counties as well as Fort

All of the services are free and confidential. Davis said there are many positive things about the center, but the predominant one can be summed up easily: it's mere existence. It gives people a chance to leave a bad situation.

"They have an alternative," Davis said. "They have support while they explore options and make decisions.

The center has a 24-hour hotline and also offers crisis intervention. emergency transportation, safe shelter, support groups for women and children and counseling assistance with protection orders.

When a call is made to the hotline. Davis said the staff tries to meet face-to-face with the victim in a safe place such as a restaurant or the library. She said sometimes victims aren't ready to take that step.

The annual average that the staff is able to meet face-to-face with is 1,100 to 1,200 victims. This is a figure based on unduplicated

THE SAFE SHELTER

Even though the shelter provides safety for an average of 25 people per month, there are months when that numbers fluctuates to a larger scale. In August 2000 there were 13 adults and 29 children. Davis said they averaged 16 people per day.

Davis said there are no limitations to the length of time that the victims can stay, but there is always a plan of recovery and for moving on.

A MEMORABLE CASE

Davis said one of the most memorable cases she had to deal with involved a K-State transfer

The girl's boyfriend stayed in their hometown, but still governed her life in Manhattan. He packed her suitcase and refused to let her bring shorts, a swimming suit or tank tops.

When Davis met her in the warm month of September the girl was wearing jeans, a long sleeved shirt and loafers.

"It was like she was in a convent," Davis said.

Her boyfriend insisted that she kept a daily journal recording everything she had done throughout the day. He also insisted she call him every night to check-in.

"He hadn't hit her very many times, but he had hit her," Davis

The two and a half to three hour distance from her boyfriend helped the girl break away from his controlling ways.

"At some point she was sucked into this relationship and there were some good things about it, as there normally are," Davis said. "And it took her a longtime to figure out that it wasn't okay."

WHEN CHILDREN ARE INVOLVED

Davis said that when a child is involved in a domestic violence situation, it makes it even more difficult for women to leave.

"If you have a baby with someone the fact is that you are bound with them for the rest of your life," she said.

One of the difficulties of leaving involves a decline in terms of financial stability.

"There is often a dramatic reduction in the standard of living," Davis said. "You are going to depend on child support from someone who is outraged that you are leaving them.

Davis said another big problem often encountered is that the Kansas laws enable joint custody without considering the domestic violence history of the parents. She said lawyers don't even try to override this because the efforts never justify a change Davis said this in turn can often leave children to be used as a weapon.

UNFORTUNATE JOB SECURITY

Troy Hensley, a detective for the Riley County Police Department, predominately handles domestic violence cases. He said the problem is a local and national issue.

"I think it's probably a nation wide problem, it's not just isolated to us," he said.

He has a never-ending caseload. "There is a substantial amount of domestic violence that goes on in cases that I see. I have job security," Hensley said.

Domestic violence is not just limited to one specific area; it can involve criminal damage, threats, violation of a restraining order or physical harm. The term domestic violence can also be found in cases

"The only way domestic violence battery differentiates between battery is the relationship with the victim," Hensley said.

Hensley also said people need to take responsibility for their own actions and need to learn to step back when things get heated.

ARE THERE DOMESTIC PROBLEMS AT K-STATE?

Troy Lane, sergeant investigator for the campus police, said there have been incidents of domestic violence reported at K-State.

"We occasionally have cases of domestic violence," he said. "I don't think it's of epidemic proportion. but, yes we have a few.

When a victim gives a testimony, along with probable cause, Lane said it is mandatory under state law that an arrest is made.

He said things have changed since the early 1990s in terms of how situations involving domestic violence are handled.

In the past both the instigator and the victim went to jail. Lane said this often "double victimized the victim." Now police officers are trained to make an observation that gives stronger evidence in terms of what happened.

THE TASK FORCE

Gina Cooper serves a the coordinator for the Manhattan/Riley County Domestic Violence Task Force, which is project of The Crisis Center, Inc.

Cooper said the force was designed to bring together a task force from the community with a common vision to look at domestic violence.

The task force tries to look at domestic violence in order to get a scope of what is occurring as well as taking process in intervention and preferably prevention. They work to improve safety for the victims and the community as a whole, along with accountability and justice.

WARNING SIGNS

Part of the education that needs to occur includes letting people know about the warning signs of potentially abusive partners.

Davis said there are often typical signs that abusers give off. Three of the major signs are extreme possessiveness, jealousy and someone who always needs to be in control.

Davis said to also look for someone who habitually expresses a disregard and contempt for women.

Other signals can be found in the way an individual treats animals or property.

THERAPY

Dori Lambert serves as the assistant director for the University Counseling Services at K-State.

Lambert said that domestic violence is not a category they have designated for clients to mark when they fill out personal information prior to receiving counseling.

Lambert said the reasoning behind this is because it can sometimes be difficult for people to put a specific title on what is happening, or has happened to

HOW YOU CAN HELP

Davis said The Crisis Center Inc.. is always in need of volunteers. They train individuals to assist their clients three times per year.

There are also items that are continuously in need at the shelter. Davis refers to this as their, "ongoing wish list" and it includes items such as diapers, formula, toiletries, clothing and food. She said her staff appreciates the generosity of the community in terms of providing items.

ULTIMATE GOAL

Davis said she has a dream that some day she hopes to make into a

Consultant chosen for market study

BY SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON

Kansas State Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission took the next step Tuesday night for a communitywide market study many businesses see as crucial to the city's future

The study itself carries the endorsement of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, the Eastside Business Association. Manhattan Main Street, the Aggieville Business Association and the Westloop Merchants' Association.

The groups sent a letter to the commission in February asking the city to take the lead with Pottawatomie and Riley counties.

The commission, in a 5-0 vote, did so by selecting the Marylandbased Hammer, Siler, George Associates consulting firm to execute a scope of services for the market study.

Though the selection was without debate, the funding is still under discussion. The study is estimated to cost between $50,000 and $100,000 and take three to four months to complete. City Manager Ron Fehr said more than $200,000 might be available for this project in earmarked or leftover funds.

Commissioners Mark Taussig and Ed Klimek said they would like to see dollars, however, from the business groups that supported it so strongly.

"If these things are so important to these particular industries," Taussig said. "I think they need to participate financially.

Klimek said he agreed, adding that the amount contributed wouldn't be as important as the support it would signify.

'I think what we're going to get out of this report is important." Klimek said.

The study is envisioned to use trade area analysis, the existing business climate, business/customer feedback and estimated market potential to develop a market strategy for the area.

"If anything, it positions us as a community to see what we can be as a community.

The study is envisioned to use trade area analysis, the existing business climate, business/ customer feedback and estimated market potential to develop a market strategy for the area. Scope is expected to focus on the retail. office, hotel-convention and industrial sectors.

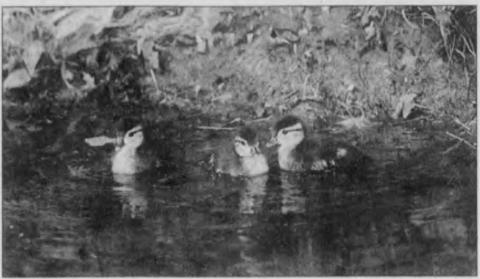

Commissioners Taussig and Brad Everett both said they would like to trim down the number of sectors. All five commissioners agreed that retail and industrial would likely stay in the study.

That decision can wait, Mayor Bruce Snead said, since the scope of services will still need to be negotiated with the consultants. Another consideration is that another ongoing study related to the city's comprehensive Land Use Plan might cover some of the same

The city can save money, City Manager Ron Fehr said, if it avoids overlap between the two.

In other business, the city unanimously voted to extend a permit parking zone around Manhattan High School to reduce crowding by high schoolers in residential neighborhoods.

The commission also voted 5-0 to relocate a "loading zone" sign currently near Rusty's Last Chance and Saloon in Aggieville to the curb in front of nearby store

Budgets restored, freeze lifted

BY APRIL MIDDLETON

The panic of what some have called a potentially crippling higher education budget cuts have greatly subsided. The Kansas Legislature passed a higher education budget in early May totaling $1.3 billion. This budget allowed K-State and other universities' budgets to be nearly restored. The hiring freeze that was in effect campus-wide was also lifted.

John Struve, budget office director, said many of the issues that were causing concern for K-State and other universities were eased with the passing of the higher education bill in the Kansas Legislature wrap-up session.

"Everyone was confident that it would work out in the end, but I have to admit that the confidence got a little shaky as the regular session came to a close," Struve said. Struve said there were several areas in the budget that had a large impact on K-State.

The first was faculty salary enhancement. Struye said the final budget allowed for an additional 3.12 percent increase for eligible continuing full-time faculty members.

Another significant Item that Strave noted is what is commonly. referred to as the "technology

In the first budgets prepared by the state. Money provided by this program was not included. Through the $2 million program the state gives $2 for every dollar that students pay in technology fees.

"Restoring this revenue in the budget makes a huge impact on Kansas State," Struve said. "That was definitely a key item.

Strave said that the university is happy with the end result of the legislative session. The issues that concerned the university the most have become non-issues.

"The biggest shortfalls and the areas that would have had the largest impact of the university have been restored," Struve said. "Most would agree that the session was the most difficult one, but it had a good end result. I think everyone is pleased."

Sue Peterson, assistant to the president and director of governmental relations, said the President John Wefald K-State leaders were involved with the legislature from the start of the session until the end of the wrap-up session.

Peterson said that so many people from K-State, including the president and the students, going to the legislature with the same message had positive affects.

"A guess it is fair to say many were panicked at the end of the regular session," Peterson said.

"But I think I speak for the president and the university when I say we are pleased with the outcome. The state realized that funding is critical to the operation of our instirution and others. They really came through.

The composition will be the centerpiece of the National D-Day Memorial located at Bedford, Va. BOTTOM RIGHT. Jim Brothers says he feels obligated to the D-Day veterans to make each detail of his piece as real as possible. He has brought in pieces of the World War II U.S. Army military equipment in to his studio in Lawrence for use as models.

Three of the 10 commission pieces of have been completed. Two of the beach scene sculptures, "Across the Beach" and "Death on Shore" are temporarily located on the upper plaza for public

Lawrence-based sculptor Jim Brothers has completed four of the pieces, including the two of the beach scenes, and has completed a 19-foot wall piece portraying the 2nd Ranger Battalion's climb up the cliffs of Pointe du Hoc, France. This piece (inspired by August Rodin's "Gates of Hell") entitled "The Wall" will be the centerpiece of the memorial. Brothers has been commissioned to make 16 pieces in all and with the completion of "The Wall" he is half done.

"They say," Brothers said as he wipes his brow after sand blasting one of the four pieces of "The Wall," "it takes two sculptors to do a project. One to do the sculpting and one to hit the other over the head with a baseball bat to tell him it's done."

That was where Brothers found himself as years turned into hours. Leaving his Lawrence studio seemed pointless as the mid-May 2001 deadline approached, but with the help of his staff he brought the project to a completion and loaded the pieces up for the trip to their eternal-resting place in Bedford, Va., 25 miles east of Roanoke.

Bedford was chosen as the site for the memorial because it serves as a reminder of how communities during World War II provided citizen-soldiers to the

A National Guard division, the 29th, had been mobilized in 1941, at which time most of the men in the 29th were from Virginia and Maryland. Upon landing in Normandy the 29th Division's 116th Infantry suffered 797 casualties. The Bedford community's National Guard had formed Company A of the 116th Infantry. On D-Day, only 35 Bedford soldiers were remaining in the original 200-man unit. Nineteen of the 35 died as they landed and two more died days later from wounds. With 21 young men dead from a community of 3,200 Bedford, Virginia the highest per capita loss of D-Day out of any other community in the United States. For this reason, it makes a fitting location for the final tribute.

Brothers spent countless hours watching videos, such as Steven Spielberg's "Saving Private Ryan," reading books, studying photographs and talking with World War II veterans. Using all these as inspiration he begins with the sculpture's head first.

"I want more realistic emotion in the face," Brothers said. "That's is the first thing we look at when we look at each other."

Detail is everything to Brothers.

"I try to be a channeler of their experience," Brothers said. "For a lot of years these people didn't talk about the war. They came home and viewed it as if they just did their job. But they made a huge sacrifice. It's an obsession with me to do the best job I can to get it right."

Brothers will be a guest of honor at the Dedication of the National D-Day Memorial being held today at 11:30 a.m. eastern time in Bedford.

tion, the study found, overall cancer incidences declined only for men while women experienced increases, driven by breast and lung cancers.

Female breast cancer rates have jumped by about 40 percent since 1973, when the incidence was 82.6 per 100,000. In 1998, the rate was 118.1. The average overall annual increase was 1.2 percent per year for the six years ending in

The breast cancer increase, said Howe, "is driven by an increase in screening by the age group at highest risk. When you have more screening, you will pick up more tumors.

Most of the increase in breast cancer incidence was among women age 50 to 74, the age group at highest risk.

Howe said it is expected that increased screening - principally through mammography - will eventually result in fewer breast cancer deaths.

"As we detect cancers earlier. we would expect there to be a decline in mortality," she said.

The study found that breast cancer death rates declined by 2.4 percent annually from 1992 to

New cases of the disease declined by 2.7 percent per year among men and by 0.2 percent per year among women between 1992 and 1998.

Lung cancer death rates among men declined by 1.9 percent per year, but rose by 0.8 percent per year among women. Lung cancer death "is still increasing among women, but it is slowing down," said Howe.

In the 1970s and '80s, the death rate among women was increasing by more than six percent a year, she said.

Howe said the lung cancer death rate among women is following the pattern seen earlier among men, where the death rate started dropping as older smokers died and fewer young people started smoking.

"Since women started smoking at a later age, we are still approaching the peak of lung cancer among them," said Howe.

Colon-rectum cancer rates across the whole population dropped by 0.7 percent a year from 1992 to 1998, with a 1.3 percent per year decline among white men and 1.1 percent among black men. The decline was 0.4 percent per year for white women. 0.3 percent for black women.

Death rates from colon-rectum cancer dropped dramatically for white men, by 2.3 percent per year, but less so for black men, 0.9 percent per year. Among white females, the colon-rectum cancer death rate dropped by 1.9 percent per year. For black females it was down by 0.6 percent per year from 1992 to 1998.

Death from melanoma, which accounted for 1.4 percent of all cancer deaths, increased by I percent per year among white males, while remaining stable among white females from 1992 to 1998

New cases increased by 2.7 percent per year among white men and 2.9 percent among white females.

BY C.G. WALLACE The Associated Press

SANDPOINT, Idaho - Sheriff's deputies have recovered ammunition and five guns amid the fecesstrewn squalor where the six

McGuckin children lived in the north Idaho woods. The arrest of their mother, JoAnn, last week prompted the children to hole up in the ramshackle home for five days, keeping officials at bay with the help of their 27 dogs. The children surrendered to sheriff's deputies Saturday and were taken to a hospital. JoAnn McGuckin, 46, was arrested on a felony child neglect charge. However, on Monday Judge Barbara Buchanan said she would release her if McGuckin agreed to not violate custodial orders involving six of her children and not to contact them without authoriza-

"My client demands dismissal of the charges and child protection proceedings and an apology." Powell said. "She will not leave the jail at this time."

Prosecutor Phil Robinson has refused to apologize or drop the charge. The state asserts McGuckin failed to provide the children with adequate food and shelter.

During their initial search of the property on Monday. Robinson said Bonner County sheriff's deputies recovered the firearms and found a house littered with dog feces.

Detectives also found a full bucket in the bathroom that the children were using as an indoor toilet after the home's water was shut off, he said, adding the stench was overwhelming.

A hearing had been scheduled for Tuesday to determine if the children should remain in state custody for the next 30 days or be returned to her care, but the hearing was been postponed until Monday morning. No reason was

A decision on where the children will live in the long run would be made later. The judge has the options of returning the children to their mother, retaining them in state custody or sending them to live with their mother under regular state scrutiny. The McGuckins lost their home to a county tax sale last September. The current owner has asked authorities to keep the family out, Robinson said.

The children - Kathryn, 16; Benjamin, 15; Mary, 13; James, 11; Frederick, 9; and Jane, 8 - initially feared authorities would split up the family but they have been assured they will be able to stay together.

Their father, Michael McGuckin, died May 12. The family became increasingly reclusive and had money troubles after he was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis. His death was attributed to dehydration and malnutrition. complicated by his illness.

Animal control officers on Monday managed to capture four of the released dogs. One officer was bitten in the leg by one of the dogs, which were taken to an animal shelter. The Humane Society will care for the animals and they will not be destroyed, authorities said.

Summer jobs can lead to fall opportunities

BY APRIL MIDDLETON Kansus State Collegian

ake Moran's bank account insisted that he work this summer. Finding a summer job to suit his needs wasn't an easy task. He wanted to be outdoors and he had three summer classes to work around.

He eventually landed a summer job at Mead Lumber, 111 S. Seth Child Rd. Moran spends his afternoons in the lumber yard preparing customer loads and delivering materials to work sites.

"They are really flexible in working around my school schedule," Moran, junior in accounting, said. "Plus I get to be outdoors and I get to work with fun people.

Moran works in the afternoon four days a week and a full shift on Saturdays.

He said school is his top priority for the summer, but making money was also important. Although he doesn't work much because of his class load, he said it's enough for him to get

Many students, like Moran, find themselves on the hunt for summer jobs.

She said some of the best places to look for job listings is the local classifieds, the career and employment services home page and the job board in the

Fraser said finding jobs just for the summer takes time and effort, because sometimes those jobs aren't advertised as heavily. "The best piece of advice I have is to start looking early and contact as many places as you can," Fraser said.

"There are lots of jobs out there, you just have to pin one down."

One important thing to remember is for students to tell potential employers that they are looking for summer employment

Also she said if a student is interested in working part-time during the school year, summer jobs are a good way to get their foot in the door.

"Many summer jobs have the potential of turning into permanent part-time jobs," Fraser, said.

"Once you've been with a job for awhile, employers are more likely to be flexible with your

Fraser also said the summer is the prime time to begin looking for jobs for the upcoming school

She said many students are away during the summer and the potential employee pool is smaller than it will be in August.

"Many employers need to have their staff hired and trained by the time school starts," Fraser said. "This is a great time to start looking and contacting employers you would like to work with."

Aggieville businesses still have a promising future

Paul Myers, senior in advertising, shops in the Aggieville business district on a weekly basis. For Myers, Aggreville is where he gets his hair cut and used to be where he purchased some of his music from Streetside Records

So it is to no surprise Myers was disappointed when Streetside closed down in May.

"It was the only decent place to get music from besides Hastings," Myers said. He said he liked the variety and unique types of music that Streetside offered.

On the other hand, Waylon Glick, senior in advertising, said he has never really gone to Aggieville to shop. "It just seems like you can get a lot more done when you go to the mall or to Wal-Mart," he said. Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said there have been some recent changes in Aggieville.

"I can tell you that a year and a half ago we didn't have one space to rent," Sieben said.

Now, there are several places open for rent in Aggieville after the recent closing of stores such as Deja Vu, Elements of Taste and Wildcat Spirit.

Sieben said this influx of businesses coming and going is a cycle that Aggieville goes through.

"Every year at this time Aggieville goes through a transition," she said. "We are in our normal transitional period. This year we have had more businesses leave for various reasons, but that is just an opportunity for more businesses to come in."

Even though some businesses have left the district, it does not mean that business is slow in Aggieville.

Elizabeth Wood, owner of Atomic Age, said her two-year-old Aggieville business has seen an increase in revenue.

Wood said she could not tell why other

Within a 15 minute time span the phone rings three times.

Karen Ringel, employee at Sun Connection tanning salon in Aggieville, answers the phone.

"Sun Connection, this is Karen.'

The person on the other line is requesting a tanning appointment. Ringel jots down the name and time on a large calendar on the desk.

Ringel said summer is the slow season when it comes to tanning in Manhattan.

"We get about 100 people coming in a day during the summer," Ringel said. "During the busy season, the spring, we see about 300 to 400 people a day."

Trisha

Schlochtermeier, owner of Sun Connection and Sun Connection II, said a lot more people tan in the spring because they are preparing their bodies for spring break, prom and the Schlochtermeier has owned Sun Connection for 10 years, and she said in those ten years she has seen an influx of people coming in and tanning.

There is more of an awareness of skin cancer that has increased indoor tanning," Schlochtermeier said. "A tan is more controlled in a tanning salon. It is a smarter tan. You are totally in control of what you are doing."

Schlochtermeier said there are many benefits to tanning. "Sunshine is one of the best ways to get vitamin D," she said. "It can decrease your chances of getting colon and breast

Schlochtermeier said she knows of several doctors who send

"Dermatologists send people and chiropractors send people for heat therapy," she said.

"It can be so positive if you do it correctly, wearing goggles is important. People who misuse tanning, that is where the risk

Dr. Jay Reppert, medical director at Lafene Health Center, said doctors are uncertain of the risks of tanning, but know tanning can be harmful.

Reppert also said he knows of no dermatologists who send their patients tanning.

"Tanning booths have not been proven to be safer that outdoor tanning," Reppert said.

"There is mounting evidence that tanning booths are harmful. Several states are writing laws to restrict their use.

There is also evidence that tanning itself is harmful. Reppert said he disagreed that tanning was a good way for the body to receive vitamin D.

"We know that sun striking the skin allows the body to manufacture vitamin D. " Reppert said.

"Vitamin D is good, but one does not need to tan to get vitamin D. Vitamin D is stored in the body for long periods and one does not need to get it daily. Only a little sun is needed to get it and that level is reached before one gets a tan.

"You do not need to tan to get vitamin D because many foods, especially milk are vitamin D fortified and most people would get enough of the vitamin if they never had any sun exposure."

Web experts suggest precautions against McVeigh execution virus

BY D. IAN HOPPER

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - If you get an offer to see a video of Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh's execution, be careful. It probably isn't a video clip, just an old trick.

In an Internet chat room Monday, hours after McVeigh's death, some participants went to a Web link to see a bootleg video of the execution only to be duped into downloading a malicious program that can allow a hacker to take control of another

Brad Chapman, a Brigham Young University computer science student, said that by visiting a Web site at Internet provider Concentric Networks, his computer downloaded the program, known as SubSeven.

Chapman didn't run the program, but instead analyzed it and found out what it really does. April

"It was just a matter of time before somebody would attach McVeigh's name to it," Goostree said. Goostree said almost any antivirus program will detect the program. Still, SubSeven and its variants are the most common threat to home computers, according to McAfee.com research.

The execution of McVeigh in Terre Haute, Ind., was broadcast to a federal facility in Oklahoma City, where victims of his bombing could watch. The FBI said there is no indication that the signal was intercepted.

Susan Gormely, a health professions adviser at K-State, was awarded an Outstanding Advisor Certificate of Merit in the Advising Primary Role category by the National Academic Advising Association.

BY KECIA N. SEYB

Organization and dedication to meeting the academic needs of more than 500 students has earned a K-State health professions adviser a national award.

Susan Gormely has been awarded an Outstanding Advisor Certificate of Merit in the Advising Primary Role category by the National Academic Advising Association. She said she was surprised to win the award.

"It was not an award that I was familiar with before I applied," she

The awards are presented to individuals who have demonstrated qualities associated with outstanding academic advising of students. Gormely's category included advisers whose primary role is advising.

Gormely began working as an adviser at K-State in December 1988 and works primarily with pre-health professions in the college of arts and sciences. She also advises some students in interdisciplinary majors such as life sciences and physical sciences.

Susan Watt, a health professions adviser who has worked with Gormely since August 1996, said she was not surprised to hear about Gormely winning the award. She said Gormely has been a mentor to her and possesses several characteristics that make her an outstanding adviser.

"She's highly organized. She always keeps the students' best interests upper most in her mind," Watt said. "She's extremely knowledgeable about the particulars about health professions advising.

"Susan's philosophy is that students need to take ownership of their destinies," she said. "She offers encouragement or welltimed warning when necessary."

Once the nominations for the outstanding advisers had been submitted, the selection committee of NACADA evaluated the evidence of effective advising qualities and practices that could include strong interpersonal skills, frequency of contact with advisees, evidence of student success rate and caring attitude toward advisees.

Gormely said many advisers deserve recognition and an award.

"We all take it just as seriously and take care of our responsibilities," she said. "I was just lucky enough to be in the right place at the right time."

Gormely was recognized for her work with K-State's Presidential Award for Excellence in Undergraduate Advising in 2000. She also received an outstanding adviser award from K-State's chapter of Mortar Board.

Gormely earned a bachelor's degree in science in nursing in 1964 from Catholic University of America in Wasington, D.C., and a master's in exercise physiology in 1989 from K-State, Justin Sandall, senior in life science pre-medicine, said Gormely is easy to talk to because she's a good listener.

"I think she's genuinely interested in her students," he said. "She's a very intelligent woman and communicates well."

Sandall said that although he was not aware of Gormely's winning the award, he was not surprised.

"I think she's definitely worthy of this award," he said. "She deserves it."

Missile Money

Bush's plans for missile defense overlook four critical concerns

The following is just a few thoughts on someone couldn't sneak in a small President Bush's proposed missile defense - nuclear device?

1) The Bush administration is trying to convince us that we need a missile defense system because, of all nations. North Korea might lob a missile at us.

But let me ask you: do you really think that North Korea is going to declare war on the United States? Do you think anybody is kept awake at night with the thought that a North Korean missile might be heading our way right this second? The idea of this is so extraordinarily preposterous it beyond asinine.

If some terrorist organization wanted to blow up a U.S. city with a nuclear device, they wouldn't shoot it over on a missile, they would sneak it across the border in a backpack. Think about tons of illicit drugs streaming into this country and the authority's fecklessness in stopping it. What makes you think that system make two points.

First, it's beyond our technology to build a system that is essentially "trying to hit a bullet with a bullet."

Second, the U.S. signed the Antiballistic Missile Treaty in 1972 stating that no one would build an antimissile system for national protection.

If it's pushing the limits of 21st century technology to build a missile defense system, then it was sure as hell beyond 1970's technology to build it.

So essentially, the ABM Treaty was a meaningless piece of crap akin to a treaty stating that Jupiter is off limits for a ground war. Since both the U.S. and the USSR knew it was crap, it was easy for them to sign, thus giving the rest of the world the false impression that progress toward peace was being made.

reason the Cold War mostly stayed cold, let alone go nuclear, was because of mutually assured destruction.

Mutually assured destruction might be a fairly effective way in deterring attack, but if you think about it, it's pretty morally warped.

The concept behind deterrence is that nation holds all opposing nations' entire population bostage. If any adversary launches an attack on us, we will retaliate by killing all that country's men, women and children.

4) Regardless of whether a missile defense system will work, the civilian spin-off might be good.

Civilian spin-offs of weapon

3) Critics of a missile defense system technology have greatly benefited also claim we don't need it because of the mankind. The first two World Wars acceldeterrence factor. They point out that the erated airplane technology. WWII gave us radar that we now use to track all these modern commercial airliners

Major advances in rocket technology also came out of WWII. We wouldn't have any space exploration if the Nazis weren't so intent on blowing up Great Britain with their V1 and V2 rockets. Space exploration itself (once called the space race) was a major aspect of the Cold War. The Cold War also gave us satellites, which has made possible long distance phone calls, weather tracking and Direct TV.

My favorite Cold War spin-off story is about the sonar system the U.S. had that could track any submarine within the Atlantic Ocean. This system was so good that it could also track individual whales. When the USSR collapsed, this system was declassified and opened up for marine biology use. One long time whale biologist said that after using the sonar it was as if he had spent his whole career studying whales by looking through a key hole. There's no way Congress would allot the scores of billions of dollars for the study of whales.

With the exception of medically related science, the Bush budget cuts all other scientific research. Since the conservatively dominated government only likes spending money on defense, bring on the research for an missile defense system and perhaps we'll live to see the day of the flying car.

Death penalty debate revived by McVeigh

David Levin

On Monday morning as the sunlight poured into my window and reflected onto my face while I slept, death brought forth darkness to a convicted murder.

As I dreamed, Timothy McVeigh died. Perhaps when I rolled over and took a deep breath, he took his last.

These last few weeks I have been thinking about my personal decision in terms of the death penalty. Is it right for the country to seemingly play God? Is it right for us to let someone live, in prison, after killing others?

As a very opinionated person this thought provoking question has left me baffled.

In yesterday's edition of USA Today, Kevin Johnson wrote, "He did not struggle. There seemed to be no pain. Offered the chance to speak final words, Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh said nothing. No apology for killing 168 people and shattering thousands of lives; no parting shot at the government that was the target of his 7,000-pound

It troubles me that he showed no remorse, however, how could words help in a situation like this, especially words that held no meaning? Empty words would be worse than silence.

As with every issue there are people who take extreme stances on opposing sides.

There are those like Megan Sanders. of Santa Monica, Calif., who, "wanted him dead from the start" because of the 19 children who perished due to McVeigh's actions.

But there are others who were completely disagreed with McVeigh

Did the death serve as a sense of closure for the victims families? Did it serve as a warning for those who don't take the lives of others seriously? Would it have been right for us to let him live when so many other innocent people died because of him? I find comfort in the words used on the Sunday after the children know that we will stand against the forces of fear. When there is talk of hatred, let us stand up and talk against it. When there is talk of violence, let us stand up and talk against it. In the face of death, let us honor life."

What is unusual is that I also find comfort in the last two lines of the 19th century poem "Invictus" by William Ernest Henley in which McVeigh selected.

"I am the master of my fate; I am the captain of my soul."

This lack of decision has left me questioning my own values and district. "There is no one simple explana-

Sieben said Streetside Records closed due to corporate decisions and the ability for consumers to get music for free off of the Internet.

Confetti's Party Shop closed because of personal reasons and Elements of Taste closed for medical reasons from the owner.

consumer's point of view.

"They are going to have to lower rent and they are going to have to have better parking," he said. "Once those two issues are solved it will be a lot better.

Two of the biggest changes in Aggieville, in terms of expansion, are the recent renovations of Varney's Book Store and Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

Jon Levin, owner and general manager of Varney's Book Store, said they doubled the total space of the store and tripled the amount of volume and merchandise with the expansion. Levin said the expansion has of sales," he said.

Wood said she is positive about the future of Aggieville.

"I wouldn't say that Aggieville is going to go down, because it's not," she said.

Wood said she views this as a 'changing of the guards' with new, younger business owners coming in.

Levin said he is almost certain that things will be back to normal when the fall semester starts.

"I would be very surprised if most of the spaces are not filled by the time back to school comes," he said.

Aggieville, according to Levin, is still a very viable shopping area.

IN BRIEF

Children kept informed on parents' kidnapping

Martin and Gracia Burnham's three children are watching unfolding events on their parents' kidnapping in the Philippines from Kansas, where family members are caring for them.

Martin's parents, Paul and Oreta Burnham, said Tuesday the children are kept informed of any confirmed developments involving the hostages.

"They do not know every detail, but they know the dangers," said Paul Burnham. "They are old enough that they can understand.

Martin and Gracia Burnham have three children: Jeffrey, 14; Melinda, 11; and Zachary, 10.

The children were at their home in the Philippines when their missionary parents where abducted by Muslim extremists from a resort where the couple had gone to celebrate their 18th wedding anniversary.

Since their abduction, New Tribes has pulled the six or seven missionaries it had stationed on the same island where the Burhhams were abducted, spokesman Scott Ross said. It is standard procedure for the mission to pull missionaries from known "hot spots," he said.

"We are always watching for risks, and if risks increase we will move people in and out of areas, Ross said. "It will not make us consider not working in the Philippines.

Since the kidnappings, the Burnham children have been brought to an undisclosed location in Kansas.

So far, the family has kept the children away from unconfirmed news reports - such as the rebels' claim that they killed Guillermo Sobero, of Corona, Calif., Paul Burnham said.

Hazardous chemical leaks near interstates

Authorities stopped a hazardous chemical leak at a Union Pacific rail yard that had prompted them to close portions of Interstate 70 and Interstate 670 early Tuesday.

The leaking chemical, maleic anhydride, is used in making plastics, officials said. It came from a malfunctioning valve on a rail car. The fumes from the leak overcame a Union Pacific Railroad worker and two police officers who were sent to a hospital, where they were treated and released.

Authorities replaced the valve before daybreak Tuesday, said Joy Moser of the Kansas Division of Emergency Management

Any material that had leaked out dissipated, Moser said. The acid was not considered a longterm threat to people or the environment, she said.

The Kansas City, Kan., Fire Department, the Kansas Highway Patrol and county emergency management officials had closed sections of 1-70 and 1-670 after responding to the rail yard on 18th Street.

Man faces life sentence for providing cocaine

A Kansas City man has pleaded innocent to charges he provided cocaine to a woman who died after taking the drug.

He is charged in the May 18.

Renovations to increase security at Statehouse

A massive renovation planned for the Kansas Statehouse is supposed to make the building

Some legislators have worried for years that security at the Capitol is not fight enough, and the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995 increased interest in improving it. Yet state officials also have been hesitant to take steps that would decrease public access to the building.

Thoughts turned to security Monday, with the execution of convicted Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh. Security wasn't heightened at state and federal buildings in Topeka, though law enforcement agencies said their officers were on alert.

Renovations at the Capitol are expected to take eight years and $135 million to complete, with work beginning later this year. The project includes updating plumbing, heating and wiring systems.

Plans include construction of a $15 million underground garage on the north side of the Capitol, with access to the parking controlled.

TANNING

Some of the other risks that go hand in hand with tanning are wrinkling of the skin and thinning of the skin in addition to increasing the risk of cancer, Reppert said.

Regardless of indoor or outdoor tanning. Reppert suggest anyone who spends time outside should use a SPF of 15 or higher to protect their skin from burning.

He said many of the wrinkles people get in their older age may have been prevented by wearing sunscreen at a younger age. Regardless of wrinkles, risks and rising rates of skin cancer, people are still tanning.

One client of Sun Connection who asked not to be named said she tans on average two times a week. She said she uses an indoor salon because she enjoys being tan and doesn't have time to Jan outside.

"Vanity is the No. 1 reason why people tan," she said. "They just want to look good. When I first decided to tan a few years ago, I was tanning outside and I was so hot, sweaty and miserable with all of the bugs. I realized that I could go to a tanning salon and go for 10 minutes and be done and it would only cost

The client said for her and for many, tanning is about feeling better about yourself.

"Tanning is a very controversial thing," she said. "I think we all know we should eat better and stay out of the sun, but then vanity kicks in and some seem to go overboard and don't take precautions."

Schlochtermeier said it is important for people to be knowledgeable about the kind of skin they have, so they can take better care of their skin and reduce their risks when tanning.

"We have a card we make our customers fill out asking about medications they may be taking and skin type," Schlochtermeier said. "The bottom line for us is we are trying to be responsible and help others look beautiful and feel good about themselves."

Reppert said tanning is a harmful and unnecessary.

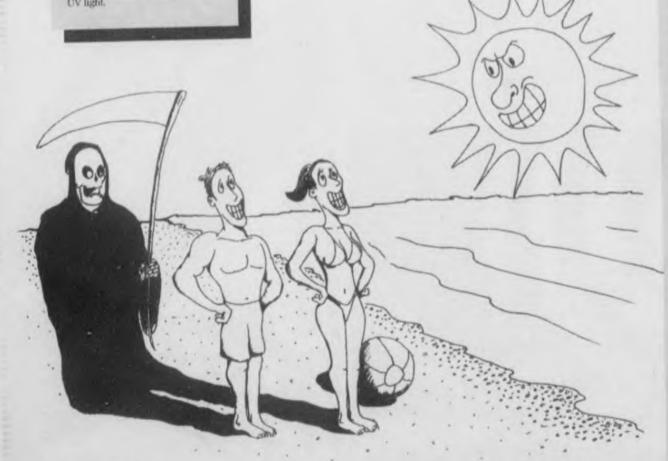

"Skin cancer killed about 8,000 people last year," Reppert said. "Tanning does increase your risks of skin cancer. Tanning is not

How tanning works:

What happens when your skin tans? According to an international smart tan network brochure, tanning is the process of when your metanocyte cells produce melanin, from critact with ultraviolet B rays. The pinkish melanin travels up through the epidermis and is absorbed by other skin cells. When exposed to ultraviolet A light, the melanin oxidizes or darkens. The darkening is your skin's way of protecting itself against too much UV light.

How To Do A Skin Self-Exam

The best time to do this self-exam is after a shower or bath in a well-lighted room using a full-length and hand-held mirror. It is also helpful to learn where your birthmarks, moles and blemishes are and what they typically look like. Check for anything that is different, a change in the size, texture or color of a mole or a sore that does not heal. It is important to check all areas including the back, the scalp and the genital area.

1) Look at the front and back of your body in the minor, then raise your arms and look at the left at the right sides.

2) Bend your elbows and look carefully at your palms, forearms and the upper

Cure and Prevention

Skin cancer is the most common type of cancer in the U.S. According to current estimates, 40 to 50 percent of Americans who live to age 65 will have skin cancer at least once. Although anyone can get skin cancer, the risk is greatest for people who have fair skin that freckles easily - often those with red or blonde hair and blue or light-colored eyes.

People who live in areas that receive high levels of LIV radiation from the sun are more likely to get skin cancer. In the U.S., for example, skin cancer is more common in Texas than in Minnesota. Worldwide the highest rates of skin cancer are found in South Africa and Australia.

CIA resumes ceasefire talks with Palestinian officials

BY BARRY SCHWEID

WASHINGTON - CIA Director George Tenet resumed ceasefire talks Tuesday with Palestinians after Bush administration officials said he would return home without an accord.

It is an evolving situation, and Tenet still might fly back to Washington shortly, a U.S. official

"He has to finish his meetings and then he will determine his travel plans," Philip Reeker, a State Department spokesman, said.

It was not immediately clear whether Tenet had let it be known he was packing his bags as a tactic to accelerate consideration of his internationally backed proposal to extend a 11-day-old tenuous ceasefire.

Reeker said even if Tenet returned to Washington, the Bush administration would keep pressing for a halt to the violence that has plagued the area for nine months.

Israel had accepted Tenet's proposal for maintaining the ceasefire and going on to "confidencebuilding" measures, but the Palestinians withheld their approval. The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, described Tenet's mission as a work in progress. He said the Central Intelligence Agency director had not given up on it.

A third U.S. official said Tenet felt the two sides had dealt with the issues responsibly and that the talks had not broken down but that he had decided to take a break.

Tener had presented a detailed paper to the two sides on how to strengthen the cease-fire and move from it to tentative steps toward a resumption of negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians.

The U.S.-led peace drive had attracted international support. U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan is due to visit the region along with Javier Solana, the European Union's foreign policy chief.

Working in concert with William Burns, a veteran American diplomat, the Bush administration sought to extend the cease-fire without any preconditions. But preliminary discussions were held with the two sides on ways to move further along what Secretary of State Cohn Powell calls a "timeline" toward new peace

Powell, traveling in Europe with President Bush, scheduled a meeting with Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres in Brussels, Belgium, Wednesday evening.

Meanwhile, Bush has backed off a campaign pledge to move the U.S. Embassy in Israel to Jerusalem, and will keep it in Tel Aviv, at least for

While the president remains committed to starting a process to move the embassy to Jerusalem. which Israel considers its capital, the mission will stay put, the administration said Monday.

The location of the embassy is a sensitive issue in efforts to negotiate peace in the Middle East, where close to 500 Palestinians and Israelis have died since violence flared anew in late September.

During his campaign, Bush promised to move the embassy to lerusalem, an act that would lend support to Israeli claims to the city as its undivided capital. Palestinians insist part of Jerusalem should be the capital of a Palestinian state.

Commission discusses superduplexes, economic development for Manhattan

BY SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON

Marcourt State Collection

Old concerns resurfaced at the Manhattan City Commission's Tuesday night work session dealing with the futures of economic development and of local housing.

The meeting, a discussion session where commissioners do not vote, began with a report by the city's Special Committee on Economic Development. Committee Chair Don Wissman. He presented five recommendations for the commission based on a review of previous efforts, studies of similar communities and local

Some suggestions included approaching economic planning and development from a regional level, creating an independent economic development entity and keeping citizens updated.

As in previous discussions of Manhattan's economic development, the question came up of how to recruit new companies.

In the last few years, some citizens have proposed that companies who receive city funds should be required to pay employees more than $7 an hour plus benefits.

John Exdell, a representative of the FlintHills Living Wage Coalition. said the committee avoided the issue and that economic development will not garner popular support without a clear living wage requirement.

Exdell dismissed concerns that the requirement would scare away companies

"I think we're being much too. pessimistic here," he said.

Linda Morse, member of the committee and a proponent of the living wage, said the recommendations represent a compromise all members could agree upon.

The second presentation was a continuation of the "superduplex" conflict that began last spring. The issue was originally brought forth by residents against multi-story buildings typically used as student housing in residential neighbor-

Last month the commission adopted a conditional use permit that adds a review process to construction of more duplexes in R 2 and R-M districts.

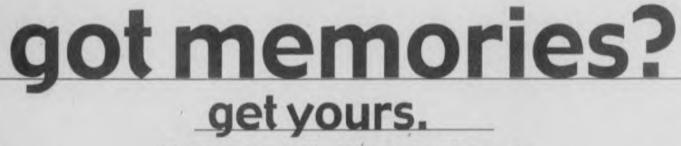

Regarded even then as a shortterm solution by commissioners and city staff, the Tuesday meeting looked at more long-term solutions. These included everything from down-zoning or up-zoning neighborhoods to creating new districts entirely.

The issue remains one of preserving existing neighborhoods vs. developer freedom and meeting an housing deficit. Marolyn Caldwell said she was tired of being labeled with an agenda for opposing the structures in her neighborhood.

"I don't have any agenda but to keep my property up," she said.

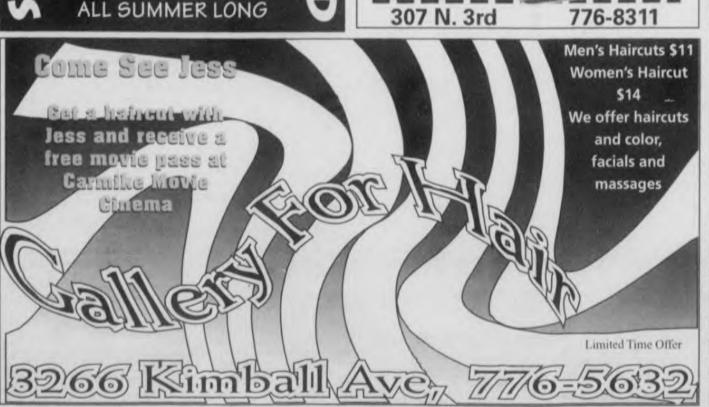

On the other hand, developer Calvin Emig said students need housing and an area needs to be designated for it.

"Lalso urge the commission to listen to everybody," he said.

Student dies in skydiving accident

recently was named president of the K-State Parachute Club, was an experienced skydiver, having parachuted from airplanes more than 250 times, said Phil Haase, owner of Air Capital Skydiving Center in Wichita, where Peggs made his last jump.

"He was an incredible guy," Haase said. "He seemed to fit in anywhere he jumped and truly had a passion for skydiving. He will greatly be missed by everyone."

Peggs died at the scene of the accident in southwest Sedgwick County. About 8 p.m., Peggs jumped from a plane at 11,000 feet and deployed his parachute at about 4,000, which is normal, Haase said. But the parachute's cords somehow became wrapped around Peggs' right arm and leg.

The position of his opened parachute and the lines tangled around his limbs probably prevented Peggs from deploying his reserve parachute, Haase said. Peggs would have had about half a minute, falling at speeds around 60 to 70 mph, to figure out what to do.

"He just ran out of time," Haase said. "He was left with little or no options to correct the situation." A funeral was held today at 10 a.m.

Drug kingpin pleas rebuffed, execution 2nd in 8 days by U.S.

BY REX W. HUPPKE The Associated Press

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. — Strapped to the same padded gurney on which Timothy McVeigh died, drug kingpin Juan Raul Garza received a chemical injection Tuesday and became the second inmate in eight days to be put to death by the U.S. government.

While the Oklahoma City bomber died stoic and remorseless, Garza was fidgety as he awaited execution, and apologized for the murders for which he was condemned to die.

"I just want to say that I'm sorry and I apologize for all the pain and grief that I have caused," the 44-year-old Garza said.

"I ask your forgiveness, and God

Garza's pleas for clemency were rebuffed the night before by a Bush administration that ended 38 years of no federal executions by having two in just over a week.

On June 11, McVeigh became the first federal inmate put to death since 1963. Garza, the second, was pronounced dead at 8:09 EDT.

"With this administration there's no doubt that they are more clearly in favor of supporting the death penalty at all costs than doing anything of substance to correct the system," Garza attorney

he Little Apple's population will see a huge increase, at least for four days, as fans and stars flood Manhattan to attend the Affiliated Foods Midwest Country Stampede 2001.

The sixth annual four-day country music festival brings in country music stars and an audience of about 100,000.

Paige Roesler, festival manager, said they try to make Stampede a little different each year, while keeping the aspects that work the best.

Although the musical talent that performs changes each year, Roesler said, some of the best talent is consistently brought in to entertain the fans.

Roesler said big-name artists such as Trisha Yearwood, Chris Ledoux, the Beach Boys and Travis Tritt are the artists that will draw in the biggest Roesler said although the musical talent is the biggest attraction there are several other events that occur throughout the weekend, including a karaoke tent, a charity auction and extreme motorcycle riding.

The fireworks display is a part of the festival that fans have come to love, Roesler said. Due to that, it is a part of the festival that she sees as becoming a tradition.

"We are constantly trying to take the recommendations of the audience on how to make the show better," Roesler said. "However, we haven't

Fans who attend the festival year after year are prove that the festival doesn't need huge changes to be a success. Tiffany Hall, senior in public relations, has been to the Stampede every year. She said she started the tradition because she likes country music. She said it has evolved into much more than that.

"I love seeing the different country music artists and the people that come from all over the country," Hall said. Hall said she will continue to attend the festival as long as it is convenient for her to get away.

Tickets have been on-sale for months for the festival, however, those who haven't pinned downed tickets for the event aren't out of time. After 2 p.m. today, tickets may be purchased at the gate of the festival. The price for a three-day ticket at the gate is $80.

"We have plenty of tickets available, but people save themselves some money if they get them in advance," Roesler said. "Nobody should miss this vear's festival.'

Kent Swanson, junior in kinesiology, checks to make sure the support structure is level under the stage for the upcoming Country Stampede. The Stampede starts on Thursday and continues through Sunday with more than 100,000 people expected to attend.

Country Stampede brings fans, revenue to Manhattan

Cheryl Sieben, director of Aggieville Business Association, said the festival has a positive effect on the

She said that not all of the merchants in Aggieville see an increase in business during the time, but some of the bars and restaurants do. "We definitely attract people to Aggieville during the Stampede," Sieben said. "Even if they only visit one store in Aggieville during their trip to Manhattan for the festival, I can almost guarantee we'll intrigue them enough that they will be back during their next trip to Sieben said the greatest business boom during Country Stampede is probably felt by Longhorn's and Silverado Saloon.

"Even if every business in town isn't impacted, it's definitely a good thing for the whole community," Sieben said. "Any money that gets spent in our community trickles down. Overall the community as a whole the flood of country music fans is area hotels. Fred Ristow, general manager of Motel 6, 510 Tuttle Creek Blvd., said that he wishes the Stampede took place at least three times a year.

Ristow said that by the last day of the Stampede last year he was already 80 percent full for this year's festival.

Taco Bell robber bike nabbed after waiting for chalupa

FORT WORTH, Texas - A thief on a bicycle and brandishing a toy gun held up a Taco Bell through the drive-up window but had to wait so long for a chalupa that he ended up getting caught, authorities say.

The robber pedaled up to the fast food outlet's window just after midnight on Monday. Waving what appeared to be a gun, he threatened the staff and demanded money and a chalupa.

But a Taco Bell worker called police, who arrived while the thief was waiting for his food. The teenager took off and kept bicycling even after an officer shot him in the arm and leg. He dismounted and surrendered once a second cruiser cut him

The gun turned out to be a toy.

"He got the money but then waited there while his food was being prepared," said Fort Worth Police Lt. Duane Paul. "He never got his chalupa."

The alleged robber was identified as 17year-old Lakount Maddox.

Woman requests divorce after listening to husband's bird

SHANGHAI - A Chinese housewife is seeking divorce claiming the family's talking bird dropped clues on her husband's illicit affair.

The woman said she uncovered the affair when their mynah began saying things like Divorce, "I love you" and "Be patient" after it overheard the husband's telephone calls with his mistress, the Xinmin Evening News said.

The woman said she noticed the feathered tattle-tale's strange new vocabulary after she returned from a month-long visit with her parents that started in May.

Already suspecting her husband was having an affair, she observed that the bird became especially talkative whenever the telephone rang, confirming her suspicions.

Last week she brought the bird to a law office for consultation, hoping it could testify in court.

"Can my mynah be used as witness?" the newspaper quoted her as asking. Lawyers were not optimistic.

"The judges are unlikely to rule against your husband based only on the mynah's words," attorney Wu Di was quoted as telling her.

College offers first course on rail disasters for students

LONDON - Rail crashes, earthquakes and terrorist attacks will be among topics studied by students at a British university that says it is offering the world's first disaster studies degree.

The postgraduate course, aimed at students from the medical professions, police or military, will include post-traumatic stress, forensic psychology and counseling. "None of (the students) are here to be taught their job. . . They bring their expertise along," said Martin Page, who wrote the Trauma and Disaster Management course for Lincolnshire and Humberside University.

But the degree, which will focus on the events surrounding disasters, will not be for

"While some people may have a curious interest in trauma and disaster, they are not really the people we are looking for," Page

He said the course, which begins in September, had been welcomed by voluntary organizations, aid agencies and emergency services.

NEW YORK - They said it: notable quotes from the wire:

"It's inevitable that you can't play forever." — Cal Ripken, whose record of 2,632 consecutive games played for the Baltimore Orioles may never be broken, in announcing that that this season will be his last.

"Even in the best of lives, mistakes are made." — Pulitzer Prize-winning historian and Mount Holyoke College professor Joseph Ellis said. Ellis was apologizing for "distortions" in regards to details of his personal life following reports he lied about serving in Vietnam.

Solar racing team hoping to generate financial support

Matt Stamey/Collegian

Jeff Snyder, senior in electrical engineering, right, and Mike Wilson, graduate student in electrical engineering and electrical team leader for the K-State solar car, carefully cut solar cells before placing them on K-State's solar car, CATalyst. The car will have a total of 1,250 solar cells placed on it before participating in a race from Chicago to Los Angeles in July.

Kansas State Collegian

Getting to Australia from Kansas in a car may not be the most practical means of transportation for many

However, with the help of local residents and businesses, K-State's solar-car racing team is hoping to do just that later this year.

Through its Adopt-a-Cell fundraising campaign, the club is hoping to generate enough financial support to balance out the estimated $300,000 price tag that accompanies its latest creation – CATalyst, a combination of solar cells and batteries on wheels.

More than 1,000 solar cells, which provide the car with converted energy from the sun, are available for individuals or businesses to sponsor for $20 each. A picture of the cell's placement on the car and a certificate of identification are given in exchange for the donation.

Replacing the nine, lunky, carsized batteries that stored the cell's energy in the team's previous car, Apollo, are 648 smaller, lithium-ion batteries, available for $50 each.

Jay Nightengale, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said the Adopt-a-Cell campaign's contributions are the lifeblood of the club's existence.

"It's vital to keeping us going," he said. "The program is good for cash flow because there's all sorts of little things that add up that this helps

Each $20 donation helps to purchase the cell, encapsulate it into a module and mount it onto a solar

The projected budget is expected to cover CATalyst's construction. racing fees and maintenance for its three-race season, but does not include other expenses like plane tickets to the races for the 25member team.

CATalyst will travel over 4,000 miles in mid-July when the team competes at the Formula Sun Grand Prix in Kalamazoo, Mich., and the American Solar Challenge, the latter of which spans 2,300 miles of Route 66 from Chicago to Los Angeles.

The World Solar Challenge of Australia rounds out CATalyst's schedule in the fall. The 1,882-mile race goes from Darwin in northern Australia to Adelaide in the southern region.

"That's the world championships," Scott Hammack, senior in mechanical engineering, said, "It's not the longest, but it's a really big

The team's design and production of CATalyst and other projects help engineering students gain real-world experience and a step up on the competition after college, Hammack

"A lot of our sponsorship comes from organizations wanting to hire our engineers. TDM sponsored us in May of 1999 and hired one of our suspension engineers right afterwards," he said.

Though the team has prided itself on producing top-quality solar racing designs, Hammack said an everyday solar vehicle isn't in the works.

"You could consider it a research and development project," he said. "Everything we design here is pretty much cutting edge. It's not meant to be nice and comfortable for grandmas to drive around in evervdav."

Tornado strikes, kills three after warning siren fails to sound

BY CRAIG GUSTAFSON

The Associated Press

SIREN, Wis. — Hundreds of people picked through belongings and cleared trees from streets Tuesday after a tornado struck without any warning siren being sounded, killing three people and damaging dozens of homes and business.

McMonagle and his wife, LaWanda, huddled in their bathroom as the tornado tore down their house Monday night. They escaped with bruises.

The storm injured 14 people and four still were hospitalized Tuesday, said Mike Callen, a spokesman for the state Emergency Management Division. Their conditions were not released.

The tornado's victims were identified as Ruth Schultz, 80;

Thomas Haseltine, 60; and Sylvan Stellrecht, 77.

The same storm also spun out a tornado that struck a few minutes earlier in Braham, Minn. No injuries were reported but some 600 customers lost electrical service.

Siren has a village siren, but it was damaged by lightning in late April or May, said Fire Chief Tom Repairs had been scheduled for next week, he said.

Joel Struck's family lives in a house adjoining his bait shop. They barely had time to take cover.

"We had timber and everything else flying through the house at that time," he said. "It was just lucky we didn't get killed."

The storm destroyed or damaged about 120 to 130 houses in the town and hundreds more throughout the county, Burnett County Sheriff Tim Curtin said.

"It's 10 times worse than the worst explosion you can imagine," Patrick Taylor, county medical examiners, said. "It's unreal."

The twister cut a path of damage about a half mile wide and at least 20 miles long, sheriff's officials said.

Gov. Scott McCallum declared a state of emergency Tuesday in Burnett and neighboring Washburn counties.

"Basically, everything is leveled," said Marsha Lawson of nearby Hertel, who came to see if she could help after the storm.

"There are cars either smashed into buildings or upside down."

American Red Cross blood drive not until July at K-State

Editor,

Don't be fooled! The American Red Cross is NOT having a blood drive on campus this week.

Another blood bank is trying to develop a competition using out K-State vs. KU Blood theme. But this is NOT the competition K-State has with the University of Kansas every fall and spring when we do the Red Cross blood

The Red Cross WILL have a blood drive on campus on July 11-12. The Red Cross has a long association with K-State and hosts one of the largest blood drives in the stat on the university campus.

There are twelve student organizations on campus which sponsor the Red Cross blood drive and I serve as the Student Coordinator for the blood drive.

Red Cross does far more than provide blood to area hospitals. They have provided CPR training and Water Safety training to many students on campus. They have provided disaster services to many of our hometowns. Whether it's a flood, a fire or a tornado, like the one recently in Hoisington, the American Red Cross is there.

Make a commitment now to support the Red Cross when they are on campus July 11-12. Let's continue the great tradition of cooperation between Kansas State and the American Red Cross.

Hey, if that girl that's looking for a date from the Boy Staters is still looking for a date, she might want to go check out the football campers at Moore Hall. You know, the age of consent in Kansas is only 16, so it will be okay.

If the freshman can't find their way around campus with their parents, how are they going to survive without them?

To the couple at Mr. Goodcents — get a room before I call the PDA Police on you.

Thanks for the crossword. Too bad we can't read it.

This is to the Battle for Blood people — some of us work from 8 to 5, did you ever think about that?

You know that area in front of the Union and Anderson that they just made 10 miles an hour since its a one way? Well, sure enough, I almost hit someone. Of course, it was because he didn't watch before he crossed the street. Maybe they should fix that instead of the speed limit.

CHANGE OF FUCUS

Photographer realizes negative approach to Manhattan is not the full picture

Hey, I'm Fuji 400, a roll of film owned by Matt Stamey, a photographer here at K-State.

Now, I'm not just any 36 exposure roll of Stamey's, I'm the one he keeps on reserve just in case his stash of film runs out and he desperately needs a roll of film. I'm ready whenever he needs me.

Enough about me. Let me tell you a little something about Stamey.

He is 20 years old and will be a senior in print journalism in the fall.

His goal going into his junior year was to get out of Kansas for the summer for a photography internship because he has lived in Manhattan his entire life. Can you believe that? He wanted so much to leave this town and experience something completely new. I know this because I heard him talking to a friend while I was smashed up against my brothers, sisters and cousins inside Stamey's photo bag.

When Stamey found out that he was going to spend another summer in Manhattan, he was pretty upset. I heard him talking to himself on his way to an assignment, while I was about to be crushed by a pair of pliers in his glove box. He said things like "What could I possibly do in Manhattan this summer that I haven't already done before?"

You have to understand that Stamey has been to countless Country Stampedes, multiple Cico fireworks displays and too many Riley County Fairs in his life.

One night, when I was resting next to a quarter

and two dimes inside Stamey's jeans pocket, I overheard a conversation he was having with a close friend of his. She was giving him advice on how to change his mind frame from negative to positive. And let me tell you, she wasn't polite about it.

I sensed that this conversation threw Stamey for a loop, but a good loop, because, after their talk, Stamey was the most positive guy in town.

Last week, Stamey and I went driving. Just me, him and a few of my brothers. We got lost on the back roads of Kansas. While we were lost, Stamey took some of the best pictures he has ever taken. I sat in the front seat of his truck and watched him shoot frame after frame of my brothers.

Hours went by and the western sky turned a bright red. I looked around and realized that I was the last roll of film on the seat. Before I knew it, Stamey had grabbed me loaded me into the back of his Canon. I was about to paint the light of a sunset onto my skin.

Stamey used all 36 exposures of me in less than 10 minutes. He took me back to the lab, put me in the chemicals and what developed on me was the best sunset picture Stamey has ever taken. I was cut up and put into a scanner and my light painting was projected onto a computer screen. If you look on page 10 of this paper, you can see what Stamey and I produced.

Now, Stamey is happier than ever to spend another summer in Manhattan. He plans to get lost driving at least once a week and he also has gotten a lot of freelance photography jobs to put some money in his pocket. And, most importantly, Stamey turns 21 in July.

As for me, I was locked into a notebook with the rest of my family. I'm right above my cousin, Fuji 100, who has cow pictures on him and right below my sister, Fuji 800. She was pushed, so she turned grainy on Stamey.

For a few months, I was Stamey's closest friend. I went everywhere he did. I've since been replaced, but not before helping Stamey change his attitude about Kansas summers.

Fuji is a roll of film that has been used by Matt Stamey. You can email Fuji at mls4901@ksu.edu.

ASK THE INTERN

Reader inquires about student relationship

Dear Intern:

I am a staff person who has just begun a friendly relationship with an international student (we are both near middle age). I'm concerned about whether this is a good idea, since he's only going to be here for maybe three years, max. How do these relationships usually end up? Are many of the international students serious or just wanting some fun while they're here?

Signed, A Female Staff

Dear Female Staff:

Mary: Wow. Your short letter is full of intriguing concepts. Staff/student relationships. Predicting relationships. The similarity of international students. Where to begin?

Anna: I'd sure like more information. A friendly relationship with anyone sounds great — so I wonder if you are speaking more about having a dating relationship? If so, there are more issues to consider here.

Jon: If you're speaking of a romantic relationship, I think I'd start with K-State policy on staff/student relationships. Are you supervising or evaluating this student in any way? That is, is there a "dual relationship" — where your personal relationship could impact or be impacted by your academic relationship? Is there a power differential — this is, could there be any perception on his part that you hold a certain amount of power or influence over him? If so, you'll definitely need to confine yourself to a nice, friendly, nonromantic, professional relationship.

romantic, professional relationship Mary: I think we all agree with that.

Adrienne: Assuming that in fact you are two equals with no ethical barriers whatsoever — what's the problem? That you can't predict the future? Please tell me you are not going through life developing only friendships that you "know" will turn out a certain way.

Predicting outcomes for friendships or romantic relationships is impossible. Therapists can't predict it, mothers can't predict it, even fortune tellers can't predict it. Half of the fun of getting to know new people is in discovering how the relationship will grow and change. What have you got to lose? Anna: I agree. If there are no ethical issues, why not relax and enjoy a new and interesting friendship? Good friendships don't come around every day. Incidentally, three years is a good chunk of time. You have probably made friends who you knew for a shorter period than that. You and I aren't even guaranteed to be here tomorrow.

I wonder if there is a certain amount of fear or mistrust in your letter? Perhaps you've had some relationships that didn't turn out well and now you're afraid to take a risk, maybe get hurt.

Well, being alive is risky. At the end of your days, do you really want to look back on what might have been? Consider that how you approach something — in an optimistic or in a negative way — can definitely affect outcome. If your behavior is honest and ethical, and your eyes are wide open, why not look at the friendship as a positive thing?

Mary: Yes, if you've found someone who inspires and activates you, why are you looking though a pessimistic filter?

If you have a tendency to expect the worst in various situations, you may want to explore why (that's something you can change). Also, if you want to lessen your chances of being hurt in relationships: don't move to fast or behave in ways that are not honestly you.

Enjoy the beauty of an authentic connection with another human being. If it's not for you, smile and

In your letter you also asked whether international students are "serious" or "just wanting some fun." Do you hear yourself? Now that you're a grown-up, I know you have figured out that there is no way to stereotype any group of people as either one thing or another.

I can't help but wonder if you know whether you yourself are serious (does that mean finding a mate?) or just wanting some fun (water skiing, hang-gliding, French cooking?).

Anna: Of you want to know whether he's serious of just wants some fun, why not ask him?

Mary, Anna, Jon and Adrienne are psychology interns at the University Counseling Services. You can email them at ucs@ksu.edu.

IN BRIEF

Kansas taxes to be paid from credit, debit cards

TOPEKA, Kan. — Kansans will have two additional way to pay their estimated state income taxes — electronic debits from their bank accounts and credit cards.

Under plans announced Monday by the Department of Revenue, those making estimated tax payments can have the funds transferred electronically from their bank accounts to the state. They also will be able to pay their estimated taxes with MasterCard, Discover and American Express cards.

In February, the department began allowing individual income taxpayers and businesses remitting sales tax revenues to use credit cards.

More than 130,000 Kansans file estimated income taxes, either once a year or four times a year, because they don't have it withheld from their paychecks. They include some retirees and people who own a business.

"We keep expanding credit card services," said department spokesman Scott Holeman. "There will be more services available electronically."

The department is taking credit card payments through Official Payments Corp., a Stamford, Conn., firm that provides such services to 18 states and the Internal Revenue Service.

WICHITA, Kan. — He never reached his goal of walking on the moon, but the many other space achievements of Kansas-born astronaut Joe Engle will land him in the U.S. Astronaut Hall of

Engle's selection to the hall was announced just recently, coming a few months after word that he had also been picked for the National Aviation Hall of Engle, who grew up near Chapman, was scheduled to be one of two Apollo 17 astronauts to land on the moon, but budget cuts canceled the last three Apollo lunar landing missions.

And Engle lost his spot on a final flight so a trained geologist could collect additional moon rocks and soil samples.

His career could have ended there, but his value to the space program was too large to ignore.

Among other accomplishments, he flew unpowered test flights of the first shuttle, Enterprise, released from a cradle atop a modified Boeing 747.

Retired from the Air Force, Air National Guard and NASA, Engle now works as a consultant and adviser on safety issues for the International Space Station.

U.S. Capitol exhibit to be on display in Topeka

TOPEKA, Kan. — Think of it as being able to visit two capitols in just one trip.

A traveling exhibit on the history of the U.S. Capitol will be on display at the Statehouse through the end of July. The exhibit, sponsored by the U.S. Capitol Historical Society, celebrates the 200th birthday of the national building.

The exhibit, "Where Freedom Speaks," features six panels displayed in the second-floor rotunda of the Statehouse. They provide information about the U.S. Capitol's construction, as well as its dome, rotunda, legislative chambers and the National Statuary Hall.

"Our mission is to teach the history of the Capitol building and Congress to the general public," said Donald Kennon, chief historian for the national society.

The exhibit is geared toward people interested in architecture and history, Kennon said.

Kennon said the idea for the traveling exhibit came from an exhibit of photographs of state capitol domes. Research and gathering images for two identical exhibits took about a year to complete, Kennon said.

The society has scheduled its exhibits at sites around the nation through March 2003.

The exhibit has been displayed at the Alabama, Arizona, Ohio and Pennsylvania statehouses, as well as at the Milwaukee Public Library. Plans call for it to be displayed at statehouses in Idaho, Maine, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

Holocaust survivors, slave laborers receive reparations

BY FRANK ELTMAN

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — After years of litigation, checks were sent out to thousands of Holocaust survivors around the world Tuesday in the first reparations paid to those forced into slave labor by the Nazis.

The New York-based Jewish Claims Conference sent payments of about $4,400 each to some 10,000 Jewish survivors in 25 countries. At the same time, checks were sent to 10,000 non-Jewish survivors in the Czech Republic. Payments to survivors in Poland were expected to be made June 28.

"About this topic, there is no justice," said Greg Schneider, assistant director of the Claims Conference. "Despite the talk of billions of dollars in settlement funds and raised expectations, no survivors will get rich and no amount of money can ever compensate."

Up to 1.5 million surviving slave and forced laborers - most in central and eastern Europe — are believed eligible for compensation.

Claims and payments are handled by seven partner organizations: five based in Eastern Europe for victims living in those countries; the Jewish Claims Conference, which handles Jewish claims; and the Geneva-based International Organization for Migration, responsible for claims from the rest of the world.

The Claims Conference estimates that up to 160,000 Jewish Holocaust survivors worldwide will eventually be eligible for payments from a $4.37 billion fund authorized by the German government to settle a series of U.S. lawsuits seeking compensation from German companies. The fund is actually 10 billion German marks and the amount in U.S. dollars fluctuates with currency values.

Tens of thousands of non-Jews also have applied.

"Slave laborers" are people those who were forced to work in a concentration camp, ghetto or comparable conditions of confinement. They are eligible for payments of up to $6,600. "Forced laborers," those who were forced to work in areas under Nazi or Axis occupation, will receive about $2,200 each.

Those receiving the $4,400 payments sent out Tuesday will receive additional payments after all other claimants have been identified and paid.

Germany has paid some $60 billion in restitution for suffering at the hands of the Nazis, but slave labor had always fallen between the cracks. German companies long denied responsibility for using slave labor, arguing they had been pressured by the Nazis.

"An important chapter is closed, but I want to be very clear: There can never be moral closure," said Dieter Kastrup, Germany's ambassador to the United Nations. "We have to make sure that a tragic history does not repeat itself. In that spirit, let us continue to work together."

One Auschwitz survivor, Mendel Rosenfeld of Brooklyn, told of being forced as a teen-ager to build a village of wooden huts in a forest near his home in Dej, Hungary. He said, in broken English, that while he appreciated the token payment, nothing could make up for losing his father, brothers and other relatives in the death camps.

"If anybody would tell me any kind of money, that I should go through what I went through ...," he said as his voice trailed off.

About UFM:

UFM was started in 1968 by students as a way to improve the connection between the K-State community and the Manhattan community. The basis of the program allows K-State students and community members to teach and take a variety of educational and recreational classes together.

Emily Van Eman, junior in geography, assists Michael Bennett in teaching a UFM Fling and Salsa dancing class. UFM offers a variety of recreational and educational classes for Manhattan community members and K-State students.

A CLASS OF ITS OWN

Community takes advantage of UFM opportunities

ichael Bennett is getting paid for something he loves to do.

"It is a great job," he said. "It is everything I could ask for."

Bennett, a UFM dance instructor for 15 years, said his job allows him to share something he loves with others.

"Most of the people who take my classes have not danced before," he said. "But they are willing to learn, which makes my job of showing them a lot of fun."

Bennett was first exposed to dancing as a

"My mother was a dancer in the San Francisco Ballet Company," he said. "I knew a lot of people in the company and I kind of picked up on dancing. However, I was no ballet dancer, so I guess teaching is a way to express myself."

Bennett said anyone can learn to dance, it just takes practice. In fact, his teaching partner, Emily Van Eman, learned in two weeks.

"I needed a job for the summer and Michael needed an assistant," Van Eman, junior in geography, said. "He is a very good teacher and he can make anyone look good."

Bennett is now teaching two classes during the summer, Ballroom and Fling and Salsa dancing, through UFM. In the fall and spring semesters, he teaches up to seven classes.

The dancing classes are the most popular classes year around, Linda Teener, UFM executive director, said.

"They always fill up," Tenner said.

"A lot of it, I'm sure, has to do with Michael. When you dance with him, you feel like you have been dancing for years. He is a very qualified teacher."

Tenner said UFM recruits people every semester to teach classes they are interested in.

"Anyone can be a teacher," she said. "It is a great opportunity to meet people, experience leadership and share with others a talent you know"

The age of instructors for UFM varies from 11-years-old up to 94-years-old.

"That much variety in age allows us to offer something for everyone," Tenner said. "A lot of people will take one class and then find several others that interest them."

For Elizabeth Ferguson, Fling and Salsa dancing is one of several classes she has taken through UFM.

"I have taken classes in gardening, massage and many others," said Ferguson, graduate student in family and life education.

"UFM offers affordable classes that don't last long. It is a great way to learn something without getting bored of the repetitiveness that regular classes offer."

Ferguson and her boyfriend, Jeremy Hageman, K-State graduate, are taking the dancing class together.

"We both like to dance," Hageman said, "but neither one of us can do it very well, so we thought we would give it a try."

Tenner said a goal of UFM is to expose people to things they may not otherwise try.

"Everyone can learn," she said. "We just want to give them the opportunity."

David Jones, junior in aviation, teaches a UFM student how to float on his back during a level two swim class Tuesday afternoon. UFM offers seven levels of swimming lessons, private lessons and Hydroaerobics.

Ford Motors under investigation for improper replacement of recalled tires

By NEDRA PICKLER

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The head of a committee investigating tire safety said Tuesday he has data showing Ford Motor Co. is replacing Firestone tires with other brands that fail more often, but he refused to make the information public.

The move by House Commerce Committee Chairman Billy Tauzin, R-La., prompted strong criticism by ranking Democrat John Dingell of Michigan and Ford CEO Jacques Nasser. They said Tauzin has a responsibility to let the public know such information.

"If we have a brand name that is defective, ... at least tell the American people the brand names," Dingell said during a hearing.

Later, Tauzin identified two tire brands, the Goodyear Wrangler HT and the General Grabber AP XL, but did not identify five other brands his office said congressional investigators determined had higher failure rates than the Firestone Wilderness AT tires Ford recalled last month.

The replacement tires are made by Michelin, Continental, Goodyear, BF Goodrich and Uniroyal.

Tauzin said he wants to give federal highway safety experts a month to review the information that the committee collected before revealing all the brands.

He said the data show that one of the replacement tires has a property damage claims rate of 124 per million tires, well above the nine claims per million for the Wilderness AT tires being replaced by Ford.

"Ford can replace all our Wilderness AT tires, but Explorers will continue to roll over, and we need to understand why."

John Lampe, Bridgestone/Firestone CEO

"Are we going to be replacing worse tires for the tires that come off these cars?" Tauzin asked Nasser.

"Mr. Chairman, we shouldn't be waiting 30 days," Nasser replied angrily. "If that data you have is accurate, we should be acting in 30 minutes."

Michael Jackson, deputy secretary of transportation, testified after Nasser and told the committee the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration would give a preliminary response to the data on Wednesday.

Officials from Goodyear and Continental, which also manufactures the General tire brand, said they could not comment until they have had time to review the numbers Tauzin cited.

Goodyear spokesman Chuck Sinclair said the tire maker is not aware of any injuries or deaths caused by tread separations for any of the replacement tires it supplied to Ford.

Ford does not have access to the same information as Tauzin's committee because tire makers keep their property damage claims rates confidential. The Commerce Committee has been collecting that information from tire makers for several months.

Ford officials previously said they asked NHTSA about the replacement tires they planned to use and the agency did not raise any safety concerns. But Tauzin noted that NHTSA never approved any of the tires that Ford decided to use.

"How can you justify replacing a tire that fails 15 out of a million with a tire that has a claims rate failure of 124 out of a million, and are we going to be in another cycle of recall later on?" Tauzin said.

"We can't justify it if the facts are right," Nasser said.

The Wilderness AT has been at the center of a nearly yearlong debate over the safety of Firestone tires. Bridgestone/Firestone Inc.'s voluntary recall of 6.5 million tires last August included the 15inch version of the Wilderness AT,

The company insisted that other sizes of the tire made at other plants were safe. But last month Ford said it was still concerned about safety and announced it would replace all 13 million Wilderness ATs still on its made at its plant in Decatur, Ill.

The Wilderness AT had been standard equipment on the Ford Explorer, the world's best-selling sport utility vehicle. Many of the 203 fatal accidents among the thousands of crashes reported to the highway safety administration in the last year were rollovers of the Explorer that occurred after the tires failed.

Ford insists the problem is the result of flawed tires, but Bridgestone/Firestone says the design of the Explorer also is a factor.

"Ford can replace all our Wilderness AT tires, but Explorers will continue to roll over, and we need to understand why," said Bridgestone/Firestone CEO John Lampe.

More than 2,000 auto workers from around the country drove to the Capitol in a caravan of Ford Explorers Tuesday to tell Congress that the vehicles they make are safe, despite claims that the popular SUV has design flaws.

United Auto Workers members crowded the park across from the Capitol, waving placards that read "Quality People, Quality Cars," "Quality is my final answer" and "UAW makes safety 1."

Jackson said NHTSA planned to finish its investigation within a month. He said the agency was also reviewing Firestone's claim that the Explorer has a steering problem that leads to more rollovers when a tire fails and would decide whether to open an investigation into the Explorer this summer.

Commission moves toward land use plan

BY SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON

Kansas State Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission took the next step Tuesday night towards an updated comprehensive land use plan for the city.

With a 5-0 vote, the commission approved the contract with Clarion Associations, LLC, based in Fort Collins, Colo., and its scope of services for an update of the 1991 Manhattan Urban Area Comprehensive Plan.

The plan, an extensive collection of data on local zoning, transportation, ownership patterns and infrastructure, is used as a general guide for the direction and nature of growth and development in the area.

The update project, funded by $77,250 each from the city and Riley County, covers 65 to 70 square miles.

Though the plan is largely an update of the older plan, it will also consider issues from 2000 city studies like the Manhattan Area Transportation Strategy, the Downtown Tomorrow Development Plan and the Housing Manhattan Plan, as well as the 1998 Gateway to Manhattan Plan.

Assistant Director for Planning Eric Cattell said the update will also address concerns more publicized since the 1991 plan, such as economic issues, natural resources and public facilities and services.

"We're not starting from a blank page from a policy standpoint," he said. In addition, Cattell said the city's upcoming Community Market Analysis will likely provide information that can be used again for this plan and the update of the Sewer and Water Master Plan can borrow in turn from the updated land plan.

Though the contract and scope were approved unanimously, commissioners and citizens did voice concerns with ongoing details.

Dave MacFarland said he would like to see the plan use more indicators from programs like the Geographic Information System.

you're doing, you can't tell if you're in the right direction," he said. Commissioner Mark Taussig

"If you can't measure what said he would like to see the plan extend its area to examine more land near Interstate 70.

"I just wish it was a little more ambitious," he said. "I don't think it's as visionary as Manhattan can be." Mayor Bruce Snead also said

Mayor Bruce Snead also sai he had concerns about the budget of the plan.

Catell said the project could include all tasks under the current budget, but no contingency fund exists. Snead said he would like to establish a smaller back-up fund in case the project should need $8,000 or $9,000 more than planned.

Cattell said Clarion should be able to begin the project next month. Current estimates are that the entire project could be completed in 18 to 24 months.

Terrorist bomber may receive death penalty

By LARRY NEUMEISTER

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A prosecutor argued Tuesday that a man convicted in a terrorist bombing at a U.S. embassy should be put to death because he remains a threat, having maimed a prison guard with a sharpened comb and vowed to kill again.

In opening statements at a penalty proceeding, Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael Garcia called the defendant "the killer who said he would kill again — and he almost did."

Jurors convicted Khalfan Khamis Mohamed, 27, last month, saying he helped build and deliver a bomb that killed 11 people in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, on Aug. 7, 1998. A simultaneous bombing at the U.S. embassy in Nairobi, Kenya, killed 213, including 12 Americans.

The jury must now must decide if Mohamed should be executed.

Garcia told jurors that

Mohamed confessed that, if not for his arrest, he would have taken part in other terrorist attacks. The prosecutor added that Mohamed and his cell mate allegedly stabbed a guard in the eye, causing permanent brain damage.

Mohamed's attorney, David Ruhnke, claimed the cell mate was the sole assailant.

The same jurors convicted Mohamed Rashed Daoud Al-'Owhali of murder in the Nairobi attack. But they could not agree on imposing the death penalty, meaning he will receive a life sentence.

Prosecutors say Al-'Owhali, 24, and Mohamed were soldiers in a worldwide scheme to kill Americans allegedly masterminded by fugitive Saudi millionaire Osama bin Laden.

Also convicted of conspiracy at last month's trial were Wadih El-Hage, a naturalized U.S. citizen, and Mohamed Sadeek Odeh. They face life in prison.

Research park to expand on campus

BY JESSICA PITTS

Kansas State Collegian

Putting a new spin on university research was the goal when plans developed for the K-State Research Park.

"We want to have a working research relationship between the community and the university," Larry Fox, K-State real estate manager, said. "The development will allow us to bring in businesses that can be beneficial to the university."

The 25-acre park, owned by Kansas State University Foundation, will lease land to tenant companies with cooperative relationships with the university.

"There is a real shortage of research space on campus," Fox said. "K-State is in need of additional space and by having companies come in we are also providing learning and job opportunities for students."

More than 40 jobs are created in Kansas for every million dollars of research awards to the university, according to data from the U.S. Commerce Department, so the sizable increase in K-State's research space will help fuel the economy, Fox said.

Nanoscale Materials, the first technology spin-out from K-State, is the first tenant for the research park.

"We are a rapidly growing technology company and we needed additional research space," Robert Rosander, Nanoscale president and CEO, said. "This agreement between the university and us is a great fit because of the location of the building and the relationship with K-State."

Nanoscale is the exclusive licensee for a portfolio of patents held for K-State by the KSU Research Foundation. The patents include processes, products and applications for reactive nanoparticles that address the needs of multi-million dollar markets in fields such as air and water purification and environmental remediation and decontamination.

"It really helped us meet two goals," Rosander said. "We were able to help kick-off the building of the research park and it allowed us to expand our business in prime space near K-State."

The foundation is now in the process of developing the infostructure for the park on north Manhattan Avenue, Fox said. Construction on the streets will begin in the later part of the summer and construction of the buildings will begin in the fall. The project is expected to be completed by the early part of 2002.

Justice department to settle tobacco case

BY KAREN GULLO

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department wants to settle its drawn-out civil lawsuit seeking damages from tobacco companies, government officials said Tuesday, in a move that appeared to take the industry by surprise.

Two Bush administration sources said there has been concern about the government's case. These officials, discussing the matter only on grounds of anonymity, said the department would prefer to go for a settlement now rather than risk losing.

The department suffered a major setback last year when the judge hearing the case — U.S. District Judge Gladys Kessler — dismissed two counts which would have allowed the government to recover some expenses related to sick smokers.

The suit was filed in September 1999. Under the leadership of then-Attorney General Janet Reno, the Justice Department said at the time that federal health care plans spend more than $20 billion a year treating smoking-related illnesses. It said those costs should be recovered.

President Clinton applauded the suit, saying Americans deserved a day in court. Officials said Attorney General John Ashcroft has assembled a team of three lawyers, all career attorneys in the department's civil division, to work on the settlement. The lawyers met Tuesday for the first time with the department's tobacco litigation team to begin talking about a potential settlement, sources said.

These officials stressed that the department was not giving up the suit, saying instead that it would continue the litigation even as it seeks a settlement.

The recommendation was made to Ashcroft by Stuart Schiffer, head of the department's Civil Division.

As a senator, Ashcroft opposed the suit.

Philip Morris Inc., based in New York, issued a statement saying: "Philip Morris has not been approached about settlement of the Department of Justice lawsuit, nor have we approached anyone else about settlement of this lawsuit. We are not aware of any settlement discussions. We continue to believe the case is without merit."

Steve Watson, vice president for external affairs with Lorillard, Tobacco Co., based in Greensboro, N.C., said, "We have not had any settlement discussions with other companies within the industry or with the government regarding the case."

Tobacco analyst Martin
Feldman of Salomon Smith Barney said that while individual smokers have successfully sued tobacco companies for large damage awards, the government's racketeering suit against the industry appeared to be on shaky ground.

"The tobacco industry always had a very good chance of winning this case," said Feldman.

Philip Morris' stock fell 20 cents to close at $44.60 on the New York Stock Exchange. RJ Reynolds Tobacco Holdings (RJR) fell 42 cents to close at $52.53. Loews Corp., which owns Lorillard, lost 45 cents and closed at $65.75. British American Tobacco, which owns Brown & Williamson, rose 4 cents a share to close at $15.10.

Anti-tobacco advocates contended the government's case is strong and expressed concerns that a settlement could be a sweetheart deal for tobacco companies.

"This is clearly a political decision, not a legal judgment," said Matthew Myers, president of Campaign for Tobacco-Free Kids, adding that tobacco companies contributed $8.3 million to campaigns last year, 83 percent of it going to Republicans.

The Justice Department sued

the tobacco industry to recover billions of dollars taxpayers have spent on smoking-related health care, accusing cigarette-makers of a "coordinated campaign of fraud and deceit."

The government alleged that the cigarette companies conspired since the 1950s to defraud and mislead the American public and to conceal information about the effects of smoking and the addictiveness of nicotine.

The lawsuit was filed against Philip Morris, R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., American Tobacco Co., Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., Lorillard, British American Tobacco Ltd., Liggett and Myers Inc., the Council for Tobacco Research-USA and the Tobacco Institute.

Democrats accused the Bush administration of trying to kill the lawsuit by not requesting more money to pay for litigation.

The administration earlier this year asked for $1.8 million to pay Civil Division salaries and staff costs for the tobacco litigation team. That was the same level of funding as had been requested by the Clinton administration, which brought the suit.

However, the Clinton White House had sought financial help from other agencies to cover the legal costs.

"Most everybody who comes and stays for the Stampede will make reservations with me for the same time next year," Ristow said. "It's definitely good for business, not just mine, but all of Manhattan."

However, not all business owners see an increase in business during the Stampede.

Charlie Burgess, owner of Kansas River Outfitters, said his business doesn't generally see an increase during the festival.

"Most of the people who attend the festival are people who are working for minimum wage," Burgess said. "They save for months just to buy their tickets and don't have much money left to spend at area businesses."

Paige Roesler, festival manager, said she thinks the festival is a win-win event.

"The fans love it and it's good for the city," Roesler said, "The festival leads to terrific exposure for the state park and a positive economic impact for the city."

A funeral was held today at 10 a.m. where four skydivers from the club performed a graveside jump in memory of Peggs.

A "Missing Man" skydiving formation is also scheduled for this evening at the Skydiving Center, Haase said.

"It is the best thing we can do to show our support for the family," Haase said.

"The family knows how much skydiving meant to Geoff. We want to show them how much Geoff meant to us."

The club is also scheduling a

"It will give us time as a group to come together and remember him," Smith said.

Peggs, a journalism major, was design editor for the Royal Purple yearbook in 2000 and also worked for the Kansas State Collegian as a designer.

"Geoff was a hard worker who was always in a good mood," said Jenn Bieber, junior in business adminstration and former member of the yearbook staff.

"He was always up for a good time. In fact, one of his first jumps was with other members of the staff. He just grew to love skydiving." Peggs had returned to Wichita

It could be months or even years before there is another execution at the Terre Haute prison, home of the only federal death row. No execution dates have been set for any of the 18 other men there under death sentences.

Death penalty opponents and some former Justice Department officials have complained of racial and geographic bias in the way capital punishment is imposed, questioning whether Garza — a Mexican-American born in the United States — would have been sentenced to death if he had been white or had committed his crimes somewhere other than Texas.

Six of the 18 men under federal death sentences were convicted in Texas: 16 are minorities.

He shot a suspected informant, Thomas Rumbo, in the head, dragged him from a car into a field and shot the corpse four more times. He also ordered the deaths of two men, one killed in an auto body shop, the other in a Brownsville nightclub.

One witness testified that Garza arranged for the death of his own son-in-law because he suspected he was a snitch and had a woman beaten to death for the same reason. Garza was not charged with those two killings.

"My son only lived 35 years," Rumbo's mother, Shannon Rumbo, said Tuesday in Harlingen, Texas. "For 10 years we went through this, all these reasons why (Garza) should have extenuating circumstances. He did not give my son any. God will judge him."

Garza was the first person executed under the 1988 federal Anti-Drug Abuse Act, which imposes a death sentence for murders stemming from drug trafficking. President Bush and the U.S. Supreme Court refused on Monday to delay the execution.

Wiercioch said a recent report from Attorney General John Ashcroft saying there is no evidence of racial or geographic bias in the use of the federal death penalty will someday be placed on the shelf next to the Dred Scott decision and Plessy v. Ferguson the separate-but-equal ruling on race — "as a shameful attempt to justify the unjustifiable."

"Some day this precise savagery will end, but not today," Wiercioch said. "Today President Bush had the last word. But he will not have the final say on the death penalty. History will.'

Ashcroft said Monday there was no evidence of racial bias in Garza's case.

Compact shelving result of Hale library expansion

BY ALYSON RALETZ

Kansas State Collegian

Deep in the stacks of Hale Library this summer, postings are strewn on shelves and walls redirecting browsers to their selections. The stacks are the new home of many books that were previously located in Hale 117.

During the next six to eight weeks. Hale 117 will be closed off for renovations. Asbestos floors have to be removed to prepare the room for new shelving units.

Recent expansion has lead to the need for new compact shelving that will save a considerable amount of floor space, Trent Smith, reference generalist, said.

Smith has overseen much of the work in Hale 117 during the past few weeks. He hired six more students to help move more than 2,000 boxes of books out of the

"We are trying to provide optimum growth with minimal disruption," Cole said.

"We kept resources that would most affect faculty and summer students," she said. "Because this is happening during the summer and we have worked with librarians in different departments, we hope

She said their goal is to open the room up and have all of the books returned to their proper locations by the beginning of fall semester.

Music fans head home, clean-up continues

BY JESSICA PITTS

Kansas State Collegian

Country Stampede fans have returned home, but more than 100 people remain at Tuttle Creek State Park cleaning up the remains of the four-day festival.

"Clean-up is going real smooth this year," Paige Roesler, festival manager, said. "We have a lot of great volunteers that are working real hard."

More than 100 volunteers and 30 Stampede workers will spend the next week cleaning up the festival area.

"The majority of the work should be done by Thursday," Roesler said. "We plan to turn the park back over to the state on Friday completely cleaned up."

Stampede workers Melody Eckels and Becki Hardwick said picking up the trash plays a major part in the clean-

"The trash, by a long shot, takes the longest to clean up," Eckels, senior in international marketing, said. "However, it is much better this year because disposable trash cans were handed out to the venders and the fans." Hardwick said the trash cans worked because people cooperated and utilized them.

"We were really impressed with how much they were used," she said. "It really wasn't as messy as the years

Besides trash, all event fencing, offices and stages had to be removed from the park.

"We brought everything in," Roesler said, "including the stage, trailers for the offices and any other structure that was used."

Roesler said even though clean-up is a lengthy process, it is worth it because of the success of the

"We had a great year," she said. "The weather cooperated, there were no major incidents and we had an increase in attendance."

Total attendance numbered more than 109,000, up

Custom cutters seek work around Kansas

BY ROXANA HEGEMAN The Associated Press

WICHITA - With an anticipated I million acres of wheat abandoned in Kansas, custom cutters are scrambling to find work as the harvest moves into full swing in northern Kansas.

Harvesters are sitting idle at the state harvest office in Colby or driving the country trying to find someone that needs their wheat cut, said Roger Hale, the harvest coordinator for the area.

Each of the offices in the region has at least six harvest crews looking for acres to cut, he said.

In Haskell County, 17 harvest crews were looking for work and in Oberline there was a surplus of 10 combines, according to the harvest

"That is a big problem ... especially when you start to figure up their expenses just to sit," Hale

Harvest offices in Garden City, Greensburg, Oberlin, Sublette and Tribune were all reporting a surplus of custom cutters.

Poor planting conditions during last fall, followed by a cold winter, are being blamed for the unusually high number of acres abandoned in Kansas

Farmers are reporting yields as high as 50 bushels an acre, but there has also been a lot of 30 bushel-an-acre yields. Tests weights have been reduced in recent loads because of the heat, he said.

"The wheat that has been cut has been really good," Hale said.

"Of course the bad wheat was destroyed and something else planted in its place.'

Hot temperatures has spurred harvest activity throughout western Kansas in the past few

In Great Bend, about 65 percent of the wheat has been cut - with the area south of the city mostly finished with its cutting, according to officials from the harvest office in the area.

About 309,000 bushels have been harvested in Barton County. with test weights nearing 60 pounds per bushel and yields of 35 to 40 bushels per acre.

Yields are not as high west of

In Garden City, the area took in 1.5 million bushels with test weights of 60 to 63 pounds per bushel.

Yields have been in the 30 to 40 bushel per acre range for dryland wheat and 60 to 70 bushels on irrigated wheat. About 25 percent of the wheat has been cut in the

In Dodge City, about 65 percent of the wheat has been harvested. Test weights have been coming in between 51 and 63 pounds per bushel. The Dodge City, Wright, Spearville and Wilroads areas took in 223,000 bushels. Greeley County farmers are just beginning the harvest there, with slightly above 7 percent of the fields cut.

The area took in 46,000 bushels on Monday with test weights of 61 pounds per bushel and yields of 40 bushels per acre.

Athletic director looks forward to working at K-State

Kansas State Collegian

On July 1, the room inside Bramlage Coliseum may see some changes, but President Jon Wefald is hoping the business inside it continues to prosper, That's the day K-State's 13th director of athletics will officially report for his first day at work, probably brimming with confidence and with a whole lot to look forward to. Tim Weiser will be the man, and the mission will be to distribute K-State's projected $13 million athletics budget among its 15 varsity sports - a challenge outgoing athletic director Max Urick said had become increasingly difficult in his last few years at the post. Urick cited at his farewell press conference the fragileness of collegiate sports' financial structures and difficulties in establishing continuity and stability in fundraising as areas of concern for his successor.

But it didn't take long for Wefald and Bob Krause, vice president of institutional development, to find someone to tackle those challenges in the form of Weiser, a 43-year-old Great Bend, Kan., native.

"As we looked at many Division I athletics directors, it became evident that Tim fit our criteria extremely well. He has been successful in fundraising, and he is well respected in the profession and has Kansas roots," Wefald said on May 7

"We feel he has the total package of what we seek in an athletics director and is the right fit for Kansas State. We couldn't be happier.

What would make Wefald and Krause even happier, though, is a smooth transition from the Urick era, one that saw consistent growth at K-State. Urick, who arrived in 1993, helped engineer one of the biggest financial upswings in school history and was a major part of Weiser's decision to leave Colorado State.

"Max and the rest of the staff and coaches. have put Kansas State on solid ground over the past few years," Weiser said. "I look forward to being part of continuing the positive direction the program is already on." Weiser will be receiving a significantly larger salary for his services than Urick. The reported compensation package of $250,000 is at least $10,000 more than Urick's final income with the school, and will place Weiser in the top third of all Big 12 athletic directors

Still, with Weiser's 18 years of experience at three different schools. We ald feels his choice has more than earned an opportunity at K-State.

While in Fort Collins, Weiser headed Colorado State's 15-sport program with much success. A 34 percent increase in football season-ticket sales and a $1.3 million fund drive during 2000 highlighted his tenure with the Rams.

Tim Weiser will take office as K-State's new athletic director on July 1. Welser's strength is in his fund raising skills and President Wefald feels that Welser is the best fit for the university.

CSU's football team has thrived under his guidance, earning a 10-2 record last season. including a Liberty Bowl win over Louisville.

Weiser's resume also includes time at CSU, Eastern Michigan and Austin Peay State University as an athletic director and five years of assistant work at Wichita State. Weiser holds a bachelor's degree in psychology and a master's degree in counseling from Emporia State University where he attended school on a baseball scholarship.

Census shows same-sex households are on the rise in Kansas

BY CARL MANNING

Associated Press Writer

TOPEKA - The number of same-sex partner households in Kansas showed a fivefold increase in the past decade with such living arrangements found in all 105 counties.

Many feel the numbers don't reflect more gay men and lesbians in Kansas, but more same-sex partners acknowledging their living arrangements in the 2000 Census Bureau questionnaire.

The figures also showed most same-sex households were in urban areas, although there was an increase in rural areas. Even so, rainbow flags - a symbol of the gay and lesbian community - aren't flying from tractors.

"We were there all along. We just weren't being counted," said David Elliot of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force in Washington. "It's not like we were invented in the last decade because of Ellen DeGeneres."

University of Kansas political science professor Donald Haider-Markel agreed.

"There is no reason to think the number of gay and lesbian people has changed over time. The only thing that changed is the number who would identify themselves," he said.

Halder-Markel also said the numbers don't really reflect how many gays and lesbians live in Kansas because the question was asked only of

"I'm not sure these figures give us a true sense of the gay and lesbian population in the state," he said. Haider-Markel estimated the state's overall gay and lesbian population at about 2 percent of the 2,688,418 Kansans the Census Bureau reported for April 1, 2000. Census figures released Tuesday showed 3,973 same-sex partner households in Kansas in punched and kicked Cookie Monster at a crowded Sesame Street theme park outside Philadelphia, after the character declined to pose for a photo with his 3year-old daughter, police say.

Man attacks Cookie Monster after refusing photograph MIDDLETOWN, Pa. - A Maryland man

Lee McPhatter allegedly became irate when his daughter, Mina, approached Cookie Monster at Sesame Place to have a photo taken only to be moved aside by Jennie McNelis, 21, who was inside the Cookie Monster suit.

Police said McPhatter began shouting at the blue, furry Cookie Monster, then thrust his head into the character's mouth. When the cookie-loving monster pushed back, McPhatter allegedly pushed the character to the ground, and began punching and kicking.

McNelis was treated at a local hospital for injuries including bruised ribs.

Bewitching Books

Harry Potter books inspire creativity, should not be banned

Last week I was at work waiting for the minute hand to meet the second hand at 5 p.m. As I sat listening to the clock taunt me with its slow ticks, I picked up the Manhattan Mercury to pass the time.

Michelle Bertuglia

I stared at the headline in disbelief: "Library cancels Harry Potter program."

After quickly digesting the article, I turned to a coworker and erupted. Indistinguishable sentiments flowed from my lips in her direction. The poor girl. "Can you believe this crap?" I spouted, "Yet another Harry Potter reading has been canceled. Time to call in the judges, it looks like the witches are on trial again." Rewind.

Harry Potter novels are fictional stories written for children and adults of all ages. The series is about a young boy (Harry Potter) who was orphaned and lived with abusive relative until his 11th

On his 11th birthday he is whisked away to a magical boarding school where he learns the tricks and trades of his new clan. Suddenly he finds himself among witches and regular humans, or muggles, are no longer a part of his world. Potter enters fantasy land for

JR Rowling, the author of the series, has written four books about the different adventures of Potter and his pals. Rowling's series is full of vividly magical stories about Potter. This boy is painted as an independent, questioning, courageous, strong young man. As each story unfolds, readers follow Potter through his various adventures and find themselves spellbound in this magical world.

But Potters magic is not so appealing to everyone. As we all know there is a long standing social taboo in this country pertaining to anything having to do with witchcraft. Critics of Rowling's novels cite her series as having occult themes that will lead children into practicing occult religions.

According to the American Library Association, last year there were more than 25 challenges in 17 states to having Rowlings books in school libraries. My inner premonition whispered it would not be too long before libraries in Kansas experienced such ludicrously.

In Oskaloosa, the public library planned a reading program based on the Potter books. The event was promoted as "Muggle Studies for aspiring young witches and wizards." The library board canceled the program because some residents thought the program would teach children about witchcraft. Although the program was canceled, the books remained on the shelves in the

In a time when children spend more hours every year watching TV. playing video games or worshiping Britney Spears, I think it is fabulous that so many of them are drawn to and even addicted to reading Rowlings

Can we even begin to imagine what it must be like to be a kid today? Being scared to go to school, drugs, parental divorce and the list goes on and on ... I think it is imperative that children have a safe place where their minds can let go. A place where they can dream. We all the stress and strain of daily life and tuck our most outlandish wishes. I will take children toting books that promote imagination over guns any day of the week.

Secondly, these stories are nothing more than fairy tales. As we all know fairy tales or cultural tales have followed humanity through each tentative evolutionary step. More recent cultural tales such as Cinderella, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs or even the Three Little Pigs have a cultural lesson for children to learn.

In Rowlings novels the cultural lesson is not about witchcraft but teaches that if one is strong, independent, critically minded and caring, positive things will happen. Rowlings characters, while they may be witches, have more realistic role model traits for children to look up to then pop legends, professional athletes or super Lastly, what are we-teaching our children when we ban books as harmless as fairy tales, or refuse to hold programs promoting them in our public places of learning? Call me a liberal or just a firm believer in being wellrounded, but this world is growing smaller and smaller every day.

Children should learn about the different ways of living, thinking and worshiping. Even if these ways go against the backbone of Christianity. The greater the pool of knowledge we build for our children the more compassionate, empathetic, and open minded different from themselves. I believe it is more irresponsible to hide the truths of this world from children by stamping taboo stickers on everything, than to show them what different ways of life are all about.

they will become when facing others

Call me what ever you want, but I have read every Harry Potter book. In these novels I have found myself transfixed in a world where anything can happen. With each line read, my adult imagination is stretched and strained until I find myself standing in the shadow of my childhood dreaming that maybe some day, I too could have magical powers. After I had finished my tirade about the Potter program being canceled my patient co-worker pointed up to the poster that was on the wall plastered above my head. It read, "A mind once stretched by imagination will never regain it's original dimension."

She looked at me, winked and asked if I was up for a road trip to Oskaloosa.

Unusual comments make job more interesting

The feeling I get when I enter the newsroom is like nothing that words can describe. The pride that I feel when I hold a newspaper that the staff has worked so hard on is unreal. It is an even better feeling than counting the number of mullets at the Country

I've always liked to meet interesting people and I think that working for a newspaper enables me to do that. However, there are some unusual people out there. Unusual is actually too politically correct of a word to use, lets be honest there are some freaks who walk this planet.

First lets start with phone calls. Phone calls usually result in great tips for news stories, but there are the ones that are just down right annoying.

For some reason, especially during the fall semester, a lot of people seem to think that we are the sports information center. We receive countless calls regarding how much football tickets are and if there are any tickets still available. I've even answered phone calls where people have asked me to look up phone numbers for My postman has also delivered his fair share of hate mail to me.

Then there are a few unusual emails, especially when you serve as a columnist.

Just in the last month I have received an e-mail bashing me for writing a column about being against the Hooters chain. Yeah, that is why I own a sweatshirt and a tanktop with an owl on it. That is why I have 34 applications in my room from friends who insist I should try to get a job there. That is why I have been to several different Hooters to eat. (By the way, at the Hooters I have been to I have realized that due to businesses having to refuse to discriminate against employees, some of the waitresses there could actually work for a chain called Flatlands.)

Then I replied stating that the man should check before he sent an e-mail to make sure it was to the correct

Especially since my roommates try to use my picture to ward off our "pet" cockroaches Petey and Sam and all of their friends.

I've been stopped at a bar and told by a drunken cowboy that, "Some of your work is good, but others of it is just bunk." What does bunk really mean anyway?

But what would this world be without unusual people? Boring. Yawn.

Baker said one of the most exciting things about this piece will be the costumes. She said the costumes are based on 1941 sketches that were never used. She said they were able to create the costumes in conjunction with a Cowley County Community College

Baker said one of the biggest challenges in putting together a performance of this nature is to use her choreography to link the costumes and the poem.

The costumes are really pretty special," Baker said. "We've worked hard to combine the spoken word, the music, the dances and the costumes to create a unique piece."

The six-member dance group will perform other more contemporary and abstract works, along with excerpts from "Carl Sandburg's Prairie" during the hour and a half performance, Baker said.

Katherine Schlageck, education and public service supervisor of the museum, said the dance group was selected to perform as part of the series, because they offer something different and interesting for audiences.

"We want to capture as many new people as we can with this series," Schlageck said. "We've done many different things. This week it will be performance art."

The Art Above the Arts series involves all types of mixed media, which is organized to go along with current exhibit in the museum. Schlageck said offering a variety of options keeps audiences interested.

"We like to offer things that are unique and entertaining. This dance performance should be just that," Schlageck said.

Commission works on city budget draft

BY SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON Kansas State Collegian

After its first official work session with a draft of the city's 2002 budget, at least two members of the Manhattan City Commission want it trimmed further.

Bernie Hayen, director of finance for the city, presented a budget to the commission Tuesday night that weighs at an estimated $56.1 million, $3.2 million lower than the 2001

The same draft proposes raising the city's million by nearly four dollars per $1,000 in assessed property value, thus raising property taxes.

Two of the millions, Hayen reported, is to help fund the Riley County Police Department, and the other two were necessary for various reasons.

In recent months, Hayen warned commissioners that city funds might be tight in a slow national and state economy.

His report Tuesday night suggests a $73,800 drop in state aid in 2002 and already shows a decline in city reserves of more than $2.3 million from 1996 to

"I'm not trying to cry wolf, but with revenue shortfalls, it does raise concerns," Hayen said.

The news was not good to any of the commission, particularly commissioners Mark Taussig and Brad Everett who were both elected last April on campaigns to reduce city spending.

Taussig said he couldn't support the budget as long as it raised the levy.

"I'd like to know what opportunities we have for enhancing the cost of being a bad driver in Manhattan."

> Ed Klimek, Commissioner

"We have to find a way, in my mind, to lower the mill levy," Taussig said. "Not increase it.'

Everett said he was interested in finding ways to increase city revenue, but wants to cut staff additions and equipment costs from the current

"Unfortunately, I think we're dealing with the hangover from years of spending," he said.

In other discussions, commissioners discussed ways to increase city revenue. Commissioner Ed Klimek said he wanted to see if increases to some state traffic fines, effective July 1, would help.

"I'd like to know what opportunities we have for enhancing the cost of being a bad driver in Manhattan," he said.

City Attorney Bill Frost said the idea was being examined, though he was hesitant to use a fee designed to punish as a money maker.

Still, Hayen said the city has time to work out the details.

"I see this session especially as a broad policy issue," he

Another work session is scheduled for July 10 and the final budget will hopefully be voted in by the end of July.

Kansas man charged with planned murder

KANSAS CITY - A Kansas man has been charged with trying to hire a hit-man to kill his wife.

Donald R. Roberts, 51, of Baldwin, Kan., was charged Friday in federal court with one count of use of interstate communications and interstate travel for murder-forhire, said Chris Whitley, spokesman for the U.S. Attorney's office for the Western District of Missouri.

Roberts, who appeared Monday before U.S. Magistrate Judge David J. Waxse in Kansas City, Kan., will remain in custody without bond as he is transported from the District of Kansas to the Western District of Missouri for future court proceedings, Whitley said.

According to court records, Roberts allegedly tried to hire someone from December 2000 to June 22, 2001, in Clinton, Mo., to kill his wife, Darlene Roberts. The person Roberts was trying to hire informed his employer who then told the FBL

Roberts, a truck driver, was arrested Saturday in Kansas City, Kan. If convicted as charged, he could face 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Kansas to get money in Clearing House suit

Publishers Clearing House agreed to pay $34 million in a deal with 26 states including Kansas on Tuesday to settle allegations the sweepstakes company employed deceptive marketing practices.

As part of the settlement, the company will no longer use phrases like "guaranteed winner."

"This will in fact revolutionize the sweepstakes industry," Michigan Attorney General Jennifer Granholm

Publishers Clearing House will have to pay $34 million in customer refunds, legal expenses and administrative costs to the states.

Each state's share has yet to be determined.

"We listened to the states" concerns and have agreed to responsive and significant changes that will make our promotions the clearest. most reliable and trustworthy in the industry," said Robin Smith, chairman & CEO of the Port Washington, N.Y. based company.

In the lawsuits, state attorney generals had accused Publishers Clearing House of deceptive marketing for its sweepstakes promotions. The suit alleged that the company was misleading consumers by making them believe they had won prizes or would win if they bought magazines from Publishers Clearing House.

Publishers Clearing House reached an $18 million settlement last August with 24 other states and the District of Columbia, though the other states opted not to join.

The states involved in the latest settlement are: Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota. Missouri, New Jersey, North Carolina, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

In 1999, another sweepstakes company. American Family Enterprises, settled a group of lawsuits for $33 million. That company is known for the American Family Publishers sweepstakes plugged by Dick Clark and Ed

B-1 bombers to be removed from Kansas Air Force bases

BY ROXANA HEGEMAN

The Associated Press

WICHITA - The Secretary of Defense plans to ask Congress to cut its B-1 hombers by one third, eliminating the planes entirely from Kansas and Georgia, the Adjutant General announced Tuesday.

Members of the 184th Bomb Wing, Kansas Air National Guard, were told of the decision Tuesday afternoon at McConnell Air Force Base in Wichita.

The Kansas unit has 1,200 full and part-time support personnel, said Maj. Hans Niehart, spokesman for the Kansas Air National Guard.

The proposed cuts would leave only two bases Ellsworth Air Force Base in South Dakota and Dyess Air Force Base in Texas - still flying the bombers by Oct. I. The cuts will appear in the defense budget expected to be released Wednesday in the President's Lawmakers from Kansas, Georgia and Idaho said the announcement shocked them and that they intend the fight the move. Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., accused the Air Force of playing politics.

South Dakota is the home of the majority leader of the Senate. Texas is the home of the president. I have a little feeling about this," Roberts said.

Roberts and his fellow Kansas Republicans, Sen. Sam. Brownback and Todd Tiahrt, said the costs far outweigh the benefits because the Kansas and Georgia bases are proven to have higher mission capability and lower cost per flying hour.

"If the plan to do this is based on economics, they're going to have a hard time justifying why," Tiahrt said.

In addition to removing the planes from Kansas and Georgia, the proposal also eliminates a small active duty B-I presence at Mt. Home Air Force Base in Idaho.

It also will reduce the number of planes at Dyess Air Force Base, which will remain the largest B-1 base.

The Kansas wing keeps between eight and 10 bombers based at McConnell Air Force Base in Wichita, according to the LITTLE ROCK - A castrated rapist on parole from an Arkansas prison became a suspect in a Kansas City-area murder after genetic evidence linked him to the dead

The body of Carol Shields, 39, of Parkville, Mo., was found in a friend's apartment on Sept. 20, less than two months after Wayne DuMond, 51. moved to a Kansas City suburb about 10 miles north of the crime scene. investigators questioned DuMond on Friday and arrested him early Saturday. DuMond's lawyer Bruce Houdek said he was not aware of any other link beyond DNA evidence he's been told was taken DuMond moved to Smithville, Mo., last August, after Missouri officials agreed to take over his parole supervision from Arkansas.

DuMond was released in the fall of 1999 after serving 14 years for the kidnapping and rape of a 17-year-old Forrest City cheerleader. He said masked men burst into his home and castrated him with fishing line shortly before going to trial.

Young said DuMond's home and place of business, C.E. Jeffers Co., of Edgerton, Mo., were searched by police on Friday. Houdek said DuMond traveled throughout the Kansas City area as part of his

The lawyer would not say whether there was any link between DuMond and Shields:

I'm not saying there is one, and I'm not saying there isn't one," Houdek said.

Police would also not discuss any connection.

Houdek said, if charges are filed, he would challenge genetic evidence to ensure DuMond's rights aren't violated. "They haven't filed any charges yet and I don't know details," Houdek said. "If they're going to try to do DNA testing ... they have to properly gather it and maintain it.

DuMond was convicted in Arkansas in the 1984 rape of Ashley Stevens, who is a distant cousin of former President Clinton.

After initially being sentenced to life plus 20 years, DuMond's sentence was commuted in 1992 by Gov. Jim Guy Tucker to 39 years and six

In 1996, Gov. Mike Huckabee said he had "serious questions" about DuMond's guilt and began the process to let DuMond go free. He dropped the plan after the state parole board said in 1997 it would free DuMond if another state would take him, sparing Huckabee the heat of making a politically unpopular decision just months after taking office.

Huckabee said at the time that he agreed with the parole board decision to release DuMond. Tuesday, his office deferred blame to Tucker, whose commutation made DuMond parole-eligible.

"The only action the governor took was to deny his clemency," said Jim Harris, a spokesman for the governor. "Governor Huckabee was not the governor who commuted his sentence.

Tucker has been in Indonesia on business and was not immediately available for comment.

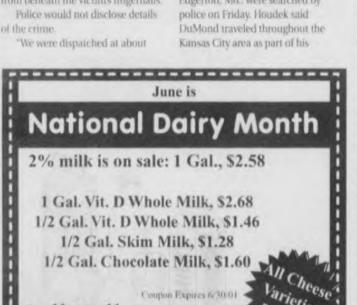

No one was ever arrested in the castration attack, but DuMond won a court judgment against then-Sheriff Coolidge Conlee of St. Francis County, who kept DuMond's testicles in a jar on his office desk.

DuMond's arrests date back to the 1970s. He was not prosecuted for the 1972 bludgeoning death of an Oklahoma man after agreeing to testify for the state. The next year, DuMond received a five-year deferred sentence after pleading guilty to an attack on a woman outside a Washington state shopping

DuMond admitted raping a DeWitt woman in 1976 but was not prosecuted when the woman refused to testify.

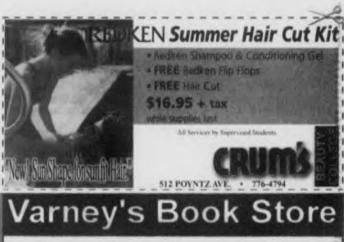

Under terms of his release in the Stevens case, DuMond would be onparole until Sept. 25, 2004.

Philippine group denies plea; claims hostage was beheaded

BY OLIVERTEVES

The Associated Press

ZAMBOANGA, Philippines - The leader of a Philippine rebel group responded to an emotional appeal by the sister of one of the group's hostages with this hopeless message: Your brother is dead.

Speaking on Radio Mindanao Network on Monday, Ana Sobero made a public plea to the Abu Sayyaf to let her brother, Guillermo, speak to his family and relieve their suffering.

The Abu Sayyaf, which is holding scores of hostages - including three Americans — uses the station to make statements.

"Guillermo, we hope that you can hear us," she said, reading a letter from their mother.

She then addressed the rebels: "We understand that your people have suffered much. We do not understand the politics of your situa-

"We want to call on your higher spirit and your belief in Allah. Please have mercy. Please relieve our suffering and let him speak to Radio Mindanao."

The station reported Tuesday that it had received a call soon afterward from Abu Sayyaf spokesman Abu Sabaya which it did not air.

In the call, Sabaya said he could not grant the request because Sobero

The Abu Sayyaf claimed two weeks ago to have beheaded 40-yearold Guillermo Sobero, of Corona. Calif., in the jungles of the southern island province of Basilan.

But his body has not been found, leading to faint hopes that the rebels might have been bluffing.

Speaking by satellite telephone to The Associated Press from Basilan. Sabaya on Monday threatened to execute more hostages, including another American, Martin Burnham, if the government does not allow Sabaya's choice of negotiators.

Burnham is being held with wife Gracia. The Christian missionaries are longtime residents of the Philippines.

Sabaya demanded former Malaysian senator Sairin Karno, Malaysian merchant Yusof Hamdan and Filipino official Farrouk Hussein, who were involved in mediating the end to another Abu Sayyaf hostage crisis last year, reportedly for millions of dollars in ransoms.

The Abu Sayyaf, which has about 400 members in Basilan, claims it is fighting for Islamic independence in the southern region of Mindanao. President Gloria Macapagal Arroyo dismisses them as simply criminals.

Military spokesman Brig. Gen. Edilberto Adan said a massive military campaign to rescue the hostages and wipe out the guerrillas was under way but was being complicated by two other rebel groups who are aiding the Abu Sayyaf.

Recently, the Moro National Liberation Front, a large Muslim separatist rebel group, backed the Abu Sayyaf in a clash in Basilan, Adan told a news briefing.

The group signed a peace accord with the government in 1996.

Abu Sayyaf guerrillas have also sought sanctuary in the Basilan jungle lairs of a faction of another Muslim rebel group, the Moro Islamic Liberation Front, Adan said.

The government is pursuing peace talks with the MILF and signed a cease-fire with the group last week

"This is a positive development." Camiling said.

"We were looking for them and we made contact."

from around 105,000 last year, Roesler

"We were pleased with the turnout," she said. "All the fans seemed to be having a great time and were pleased with the performers."

Belinda Moore, senior in psychology, was impressed with Clay Walker's performance on opening night of the festival.

"He was very entertaining," Moore said. "He involved the audience and played a long time. His concert alone was worth the price of the ticket." Moore said she plans to attend Stampede again next year, which is a common attitude among many fans, Roesler said.

"We sold a lot of tickets for next year's Stampede at this year's festival," she said. "The general attitude seemed to be that fans were impressed with the line-up of performers and the festival activities. It went really well and we are excited for next year."

Tickets for the 2002 Stampede will go on sale again in December when the line-up of performers are announced.

and lawn chairs," Mangiaracino said

"We also purchase special merchandise during the Stampede like tiki torches that are popular for camping."

An increase in retail sale is only one of the many ways the Stampede effects Manhattan. Many of the festival-goers stay in hotel rooms, nearly filling all the Manhattan hotels.

Brandon Taylor, assistant general manager for Manhattan's Hampton Inn, said they were very busy over the past weekend. "We were extremely full,"

Taylor said.

"We always had people wanting more than what we had. We had great business over the weekend.

Taylor said the Inn already has some reservations for next year's Stampede as well. "We have 72 rooms available and 20 of them are already reserved for next year's Stampede," Taylor said.

Businesses that are close to Tuttle Creek Boulevard are not the only businesses that feel the impact from the Stampede. An increase in Aggieville patronage has also been noticed over the weekend

"On Thursday afternoon it seemed to me that there were a lot of people in Aggieville, just sitting on the patio areas or out walking around," Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said.

"It seemed to me that those people were visitors, enjoying our town. I think that the exposure the Stampede brings to Manhattan is so good for the community."

Taylor said he also thought the exposure the Stampede brings to Manhattan sheds a positive light.

"The Stampede brings 100,000 people to a town that is not generally a vacation spot," Taylor

"It really brings Manhattan home to them and makes them want to come back here again to possibly fish, camp or see the campus. It is great for the community, not just the businesses.

2000, a 514 percent increase from 1990.

Male couples made up 1,888 households - a 423 percent jump - and female couples comprised 2,085 households - a 629 percent increase. Same-sex partner households made up 9.4 percent of the state's 42,299 unmarried partner households and 0.38 percent of all 1,037,891 Kansas households.

In 1990, unmarried partner statistics were based on a sample of responses while the 2000 figures were based on a count of all households.

Elliot said same-sex partner households were undercounted in 1990 because many people didn't know how to fill out the form correctly or didn't want to disclose the information to the government.

"Even if they are willing to mark it, that doesn't mean they are out in any other part of their lives," Haider-Markel said.

"During the 1990s, more people came out. People who wouldn't have marked the question in 1990 would have done so in 2000.

Sedgwick County led with 820 same-sex partner households, including 685 in Wichita. The numbers ran all the way down to one or two such households in + many of the rural western counties.

There's a comfort level for same-sex partners living in urban areas, which tend to be more tolerant of diversity, said Haider-Markel, who has researched and written about gay and lesbian

"The biggest reason for moving to an urban area is the psychological cost of staying in the closet," he said.

"The notion that you can't be who you are - you can't say 'we' when talking about your personal life.

The statistics came from answers to questions on census forms including gender and, if two or more people lived in a home, "What is your relationship?"

The census didn't ask about sexuality, but offered "unmarried partner" as a way to describe a relationship between two unrelated people living together.

If "unmarried partner" was checked off on the census form, and either two men or two women live in the home, that could suggest a gay or lesbian relationship.

The figures also showed that in 2000, 1,429 same-sex partner households were in rural Kansas, the Human Rights Campaign in Washington noted. In 1990, there were 185 such households in rural areas.

Haider-Markel said there have been no major problems with same-sex partners living in rural

That may be because they don't advertise their lifestyle and rural Kansans' general live-andlet-live attitude.

"It's when people want to bring their private lives to the public that some people get upset," he said.

Woman shot at city zoo, shooter and reason remain a mystery

BY DEE-ANN DURBIN The Associated From

LANSING, Mich. (AP) - As Bernita White and her daughter walked toward a ticket booth at the city zoo, the state trooper's wife was cut down by a rifle bullet fired from more than 100 yards away.

On Tuesday, who fired the deadly shot and why remained a mystery. "It's a tough case," Lansing police

Lt. Ray Hall said. Witnesses told police that one or two shots came from the woods at Potter Park Zoo, but no one saw the

The lawyer for Ms. White's husband acknowledged his client is under investigation but insisted he was not involved.

Ms. White, 41, a computer systems analyst, had filed for divorce a month ago, but the couple were still living together in suburban Lansing.

"Mr. White is adamant that he had nothing to do with it," attorney David Clark said. "He needs some time to be alone with his family. He has two children who don't understand the gravity of the situation."

Seven hours after the slaying Saturday, police informed Ms. White's mother of the killing, Barbara Sims, 67, of Detroit, went into cardiac arrest and died.

"She couldn't take it. She couldn't handle it," Sims' husband, Bennie Sims, told WDIV-TV, "It killed her. It almost killed me.'

The bullet, which struck Ms. White in the heart and exited her side, has not been found.

Hall said authorities have ruled out the possibility that the bullet had been fired randomly into the air. Based on the bullet's trajectory. someone meant to shoot the woman,

Soldier dies from stab wounds Saturday

BY APRIL MIDDLETON
Kanses State Collegian

Randall S. Lindsey, a soldier stationed at Fort Riley, died from stab wounds caused by a knife to the abdomen area after midnight Saturday in Aggieville.

Skylor Cole Alexander,17, 744 Dehoff
Drive, was arrested on charges of first degree murder and is being held at North Central Kansas Regional Juvenile Detention Facility,
Junction City, until further court precedings.

A Riley County police officer patrolling Aggieville was alerted of a stabbing in the 1200 block of Laramie Street shortly after 12:30 a.m. Riley County Emergency Medical services transported Lindsey to Mercy Hospital on College Avenue. He died at the hospital from his injuries.

An autopsy was conducted Saturday morning. RCPD Lt. Herb Crosby said there is no further information on the motive of the stabbing.

Gary Skidmore, command information officer at Fort Riley, said no information will be released until Lindsey's next of kin has been notified.

Equestrian team receives new coach

BY DAN SMITH Kansas State Collegian

In only its second year of existence, K-State's equestrian team has already had to get used to new beginnings.

On July 15, 2000, after only a small time on campus as a club sport, former athletics director Max Urick announced that the team would become the school's 15th fully-funded team.

Following the announcement, the team qualified three riders for the 2001 Intercollegiate Horse Show National Championships in the program's rookie campaign at the varsity level.

However, still another beginning will highlight the Cats in this year's sophomore effort.

First-year coach Teresa Slough's departure after the 2000 season to attain her doctorate at Colorado State meant another first for the program in the form of 23-year-old Lindsay Briendenthal.

Smart chips updated on IDs

BY JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Faculty, staff and students who use their Wildcat ID cards for vending and printing services on campus will have to get a replacement card.

The "smart chip" on the card is being updated and after July 1, the old chip will no longer function.

"Essentially it was a requirement by the company to update the cards," Craig Johnson, K-State ID Center manager, said. "The benefits will be with the new software. The students won't see any difference."

Card holders who use the "smart chip" function can get a replacement ID in the K-State Student Union ID Center for free. Any balances will be transferred to the new card.

"We are trying to make this transition as smooth as possible," Johnson said.

Cardholders who do not use the function will not need to replace their cards.

"The old cards will still be valid for identification and other Wildcat Card functions on and off campus," Johnson said.

A Moo in June created by K-State students Megan Christenson, Jack Hayes, Micah Tenner and Winston Branch, associate professor of art, is displayed in Prairie Village during the Cow Parade. Cows created by Kansas artists can be seen grazing the streets of Kansas City and its suburbs.

Cows on parade

Kansas artists display artwork in Kansas City

BY ALYSON RALETZ Kansas State Collegian

hese cows do not graze, chew or even moo. Kansas artists have painted fiber-glass cows that are on display throughout Kansas City, Mo., until Sept. 14.

The life-sized structures, which are 8 feet long and 5 feet tall, arrived white and ready for artists to splash on their impressions of whatever theme they chose.

Cow Parade has sponsored similar events in New York and Chicago. At the end of the event there will be online and live auctions to benefit children organizations in Kansas City. Proceeds will go to the children's programs of the American Royal, Kemper Museum of Contemporary Art and Friends of the Zoo.

Seven K-State students had the opportunity to paint Moo in June, one of the 300 structures, which is now on display in Prairie Village Shopping Center in Prairie Village, Kan.

After receiving the university's permission, there were many brainstorming sessions to come up with the best design for the cow, said Megan Christensen, a senior in fine art and one of the student artists.

"Trying to get seven people on the same page was the most challenging aspect of the project," Christensen said. "The cows are usually done by only one artist. We tried to get everyone involved without being inhibited by subject or theme."

They finally decided to let each artist have a portion of the cow, she said. Ultimately, there are many mini vignettes scattered across the cow with swirls of color separating them.

She said the mini scenes range from one highlighting the sciences with DNA strands and the veterinary medicine symbol to show casing the arts with a section devoted to dancers. Other sections include Wizard of Oz motifs, and abstract drawings of farm equipment and engineering symbols.

"It's as if you are looking in a kaleidoscope with all of its colorful facets, much like the many facets of K-State,"

Winston Branch, associate professor of art, said.

Winston Branch, associate professor of art, said.

Branch, who led the team of artists, said he tried to make the cow more interesting by letting the students follow their individual spirit.

"With seven people, I felt the best way would be to get them to paint what they were best at," he said.

"Instead of having a monolithic concept of us all doing get them to paint what they were best at," he said.

"Instead of having a monolithic concept of us all doing one thing, I thought it would be more interesting to let them express their individuality."

Christensen said, as an art student, the project was rewarding and a good learning experience.

"It was nice seeing the cow go from this completely white thing into this bright and vibrant piece of art work," she said. "There's a mix of styles and even some whimsical aspects of the cow."

While other artists spent weeks drafting the perfect design to showcase their talent, newcomer Ben Branlund, a junior in fine art, added a whimsical red and sky blue bull's eye to the cow's buttocks.

"I wanted to add something more interesting and draw attention," Branlund said. "The other artists liked it. I think they wish they had come up with something as simple as mine."

In June, Branch and three of the artists delivered the completed work to Prairie Village. There was no way to compare Moo in June to other cows on display, he said.

A bullseye, painted by Ben Branlund, junior in fine art, is found on the face of A Moo in June, K-State's entry in Kansas City's Cow Parade. Other artwork on the cow includes ballet dancers, farm equipment and DNA strands.

"It was a chance to celebrate K-State involvement," he said. "It was not a competition. It was a very good opportunity for students to have their work seen, which does not happen very often."

Vice president returns to work after surgery, resumes normal duties

BY SCOTT LINDLAW
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Vice President Dick Cheney returned to work Monday with a new pacemaker in his chest, promoting the energy strategy he assembled for the administration and attending his usual series of White House meetings.

Flashing an "OK" sign during an Oval
Office session, he said he felt "very good."
Cheney added he felt "a little sore in the shoulder. It'll pass."

"We were thinking about doing some jumping jacks before you came in," Bush joked to reporters, as Cheney smiled by Cheney entered the building at 7:45 a.m. — in plenty of time for a session with Bush.

"The vice president's feeling great," Bush told reporters afterward. "I was confident he would be there at 8 o'clock sharp during our national security briefing, and there he was."

Bush said Cheney "sets a good example for Americans who may share the same condition he has, and that is to listen to your body, take precautionary measures and to be active."

Spokeswoman Juleanna Glover Weiss sald the vice president planned a typical day.

After meeting with Bush and White House chief of staff Andrew Card, Cheney was fielding energy questions from reporters in three radio interviews and sitting down with staff members to discuss a range of policy issues, Weiss

Cheney planned no public appearances, and was not headed to Capitol Hill, she said. Cheney is a key contact between the administration and lawmakers, but Congress is in recess this week.

A dual-purpose pacemaker was implanted in Cheney's chest in an hourlong procedure Saturday at George Washington University Hospital. He was home a few hours later.

Aides eager to show the vice president as unaffected by the procedure volunteered that he had dinner Sunday at daughter Liz's northern Virginia home and then popped into a nearby Border's bookstore for a book on Franklin D. Roosevelt.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD

Hitler's command center to become hotel, golf course

MUNICH, Germany - Construction work to transform the Eagle's Nest, Adolf Hitler's alpine command center, into a hotel and golf course is due to start this month, a German newspaper said on Saturday.

The 140-bed luxury hotel will cost 140 million marks ($60 million) to build and will be on the same site as Nazi leader Hermann Goering's summer residence, Welt am Sonntag reported in an advance copy of a Sunday newspaper article.

Kurt Faltlhauser, finance minister of Bavaria state, said he was aware that the leisure facilities near the Bavarian town of Berchtesgaden were in a historically sensitive area.

"It's a very sensitive place, but it's not a victims' place like Auschwitz, but a place where the perpetrators were, where the Nazi leaders built and celebrated while the rest of the world around them lay broken in pieces," Faltlhauser said.

An information center documenting the horrors of the Third Reich was installed at the nearby mountainside resort of Obersalzburg in 1999. It receives around 120,000 visitors annually.

The U.S. Interconti group, who will develop the site along with Bavarian state bank Bayerische Landesbank, have promised not to allow any "Nazi tourism" at the site, the newspaper said.

Bavarian state authorities finally succeeded in finding a private investor for the 106-hectare (260-acre) site near the Austrian border in 1998.

Hitler is said to have planned Germany's 1941 invasion of the Soviet Union from the retreat. Allied bombers reduced Hitler's chalet, the Berghof, to rubble in the final days of World War Two. U.S. forces razed most of the remains in 1952 and used the surviving buildings and grounds as a leisure complex until they withdrew from the site in 1995.

Each year hordes of neo-Nazis make a pilgrimage to the spot to mark Hitler's birthday on April 20.

Woman opts to sail the world instead of live in a rest home

LONDON - A retired British woman has decided to sail round the world permanently on a luxury cruise ship because it costs no more than staying in an old people's home, a newspaper reported on Sunday.

Beatrice Muller, 82, only pays 55 percent of the official brochure price for making her home on the QE2 due to loyalty bonuses from five previous world cruises.

Muller chose to make the liner her fulltime home after the death of her husband two years ago. She pays 3,424 pounds ($4,818) a month to reside in Cabin 4068.

The very basic, minimum cost of living in an old people's home in London is about 2,000 pounds, she told the Sunday

And while her fellow pensioners spend their hours in a retirement home in Britain's damp climate, she travels the high seas, stopping at sunny destinations, playing bridge and dancing.

"This is where I live and I love it," she said. "I don't have to do any shopping. I don't need to do any shopping. I don't need a car and there aren't any gas or

Iranian police invade nude party, participants to be fined

TEHRAN - Iranian judiciary agents arrested some 50 people, including British and French citizens, at a depraved party in a plush north Tehran suburb, Iran newspaper said on Monday.

It said state agents found "around 50 boys and girls, most of them dancing halfnaked," when they raided the party.

Mingling with the opposite sex, dancing with non-family members and not wearing Islamic dress are illegal in Iran and usually punishable by fines or lashes.

After eight years, members of the Blue Township Fire Department are experienced in running a fireworks stand.

"The first time it was just a shot in the dark for a fund-raiser," Bob Loucks, firefighter, said. "Turns out, it was FREEDOM successful and we stuck with it."

This year all proceeds from the stand, two miles east of Manhattan on Highway 24, will go towards the purchase of a thermal imaging camera.

"A camera cost around $15,000," Loucks said. "We are using the money from this year's and the previous year's stand to help purchase it."

Loucks said he has the camera at the stand so customers can get a demonstration of what they are helping to

"The customers really like that we can show them where their money is going," he said. "It helps us have lots of repeat customers."

Another draw to their stand, Loucks said, is all the money that is spent stays in the area.

"We use the money every year to purchase things that will benefit the community and the fire department," he said. "Something we purchase one year may help save the life of a resident.

The volunteers also have the opportunity to teach some fire education at the stand.

'We talk to the customers when they come in about fireworks safety," Rose Mary Loucks, firefighter, said. "And we are here if they have any questions. Who else would be better to answer fire safety questions than firefighters?"

The volunteers, however, are not all about business.

"We have a department full of volunteers who like to show off," Bob Loucks said, "and that doesn't change at the stand."

Firefighters take advantage of the field behind the stand to demonstrate the different products.

DEATH BE NOT AFRAID Columnist realizes death is a celebration of a life well-lived

I was out on a rowboat this weekend, in the middle of nowhere with my thoughts swimming around me and a dear friend to discuss them with. Sitting in the boat at one in the morning, my companion asked me a question that seemed to have so many answers; what are you most afraid of?

A million thoughts ran through my intoxicated

Loneliness. Lack of job. Heights. Snakes. Cockroaches. Not finding a parking spot and actually having to walk somewhere. Lack of passion. Johnny on the Spots. Cancer. Mullets. War. Trying on bathing suits. Love. The thought of having to eat another peanut butter and jelly sandwich. Car wrecks.

Het the question drift away along with the water pressing against the boat. Comforting silence became the lyrics for the night.

But what I wanted to say, but couldn't, was death.

That thought of taking the last breath. The intense feeling of having ones heart beat for the last time. The choice regarding the final word. The words involved with writing that last sentence.

When an older person passes away there is always a sense of understanding, or at least more of a sense of understanding. No matter what it always seems as if they had lived a good life. It was their time to go, even though it still seemed too soon.

Death, like life, never seems to be fair. Yet it is so much harder when that person is younger than you are.

That person will never have the chance to do so many wonderful things. To get married, have children, have a career, to see another sunset or to hear another child laugh. These things give the word devastation new meaning.

In our society we focus so much on what they are no longer able to do that we forget to look at what they were able to do. We forget the afternoons they spent with friends. We forget that they had dreams, that maybe they lived every single second they were given to the fullest.

Instead we focus on their death.

We grieve for their family, who will never be able to tell them how much they loved them ever again.

We mourn for their friends who no longer will be able to call them on the phone or see their smiling faces again.

We weep because of the lost opportunities.

And sometimes we get so wrapped up in the horrible thought of their unfortunate, untimely death that we forget the essence and the vibrancy with which they lived.

Death is not necessarily what scares me. It is an expected part of life, thus it is not all that frightening. The scary part is how other people would react to it. The unneeded mourning.

Funerals should be more of a party than a time to

I wouldn't want my friends and my family to be looking at my physical remains in an overpriced casket, crying. I wouldn't want them to wonder if I knew how much love existed between us.

There should be none of that gross fruit punch for the luncheon, unless of course it is spiked. Instead there should be kegs of Bud Light and a keg stand competition.

I wouldn't want expensive catering brought in. Have burnt macaroni and cheese, egg sandwiches and imaginary ice cream, some of my favorites.

I would want necklaces of jalapenos made for my friends. And a DJ hired to play Jimmy Buffett, Elvis Presley and the Dave Matthews Band and the guests would be expected to dance the night away.

Another thing is, there should be absolutely no flowers. Give them to the people who can still see and smell their beauty. The dress code would have to be casual. No suits. No dresses. Just flip flops, swimming suits and grass

There would be no talking about death, but instead a ceremony for life.

For I will, hopefully, be in a better place being serenaded by the young Elvis and seeing my family and friends who have been lifted up by angels before me. A beautiful place filled with Reeses Peanut Butter Cups and swimming pools that don't have eye-irritating chlorine.

For I will be living in an apartment that doesn't have cockroaches and holding roses that do not have thorns. I will be running without having to wear two sports bras and I will be wearing cute shoes that won't give me blisters.

There will be no more Macarana, no more adults saying, "You go girl," no more migraines and no more violence, pain and misery.

It will be an extended journey of an amazing life. As Richard Bach once put it, "What the caterpillar calls the end of the world, the master calls a butterfly."

Daily summer deja vu brings student down

Hey kids, do you like warm beer, loud music and groovin' at the local bars?

Well, so do I and that is what makes America great.

Now, our proud and glorious brothel of a nation celebrates it's 225th birthday tomorrow and you're probably expecting me to gush about fireworks, patriotic duty and half-done barbecue. Well, I'm not.

I would rather address the time of year in which our country's day of Joe Elkinton independence occurs. The season most people would argue is the best. The sweaty, fun filled time known as summer. The time of swimming pools, late nights, bikinis and Carson Daly

But you know what? I am tired of everyone marauding about, acting as if summer is so great. I wouldn't go as far as to say I hate summer, but I could haunting your television all the live long definitely go without it for quite awhile. First of all, the climate in Kansas from May to September is just so god awful hot, that half the time my nipples are like pudding. That doesn't help when I have to give plasma to pay my water bill and then bike home. That's right, I get a rush out of losing a liter of fluids and biking two miles through the sweltering fire of the mid-day sun. Let's see you do it and not pass out, run into a telephone pole and wake up making out with the concrete.

Second, neither my roommate nor I were blessed with the proper amount of melanin in our skin to tan like all you beautiful and elite pieces of work out there. That means when I pass by the swimming pool at my apartment and see all the gorgeously bronzed women laying out, smearing baby oil all over each other, I can't join them because the glare from my gangly. white body might roast their retinas. Oh well, I guess I just can't cook my

However, the main reason I detest summer is the fact that for some cosmic reason I seem to have the worst days. I don't know if it's El Nino or the economic recession, but my summers are like 120 versions of the same, screwed up day. I won't bore you with every morning, noon and night to date, but I'll give you a dose of one in particular.

One of these days happened to be a Monday. I was rudely awakened by a knocking on the door at the ungodly hour of 11 a.m. It was the missionaries. I stumble across the apartment, wearing little more than my socks and open the door.

Evidently they wanted to speak to my roommate. However, I couldn't remember how to speak English, let alone define the whereabouts of my wayward friend. So, I sent them on their way, with the Lord's blessing, of course, and groggily retired to the bathroom to shower.

As I was lathering the proper areas, I heard the phone ring. Dripping in suds and fury, I clambered out of the shower, being sure to bang my knee on the toilet. Much to my chagrin, it was a cheery telemarketer asking for a Philip Stevens or a Steven Phillips or some other lame dirt bag.

I told them I was sorry, but they had the wrong number. Then I had an epiphany. Why the hell was I apologizing? They were the idiots who got the number wrong. I mean, if this chowder head really wanted to sell their long distance service or pantyhose or whatever over the phone, logic would suggest they would have the right name and number. But I couldn't give this hairball a piece of my mind because I had hung up and was standing, half naked, talking to myself, dripping soap all over the couch.

After that shenanigan with the antichrist telemarketer, I got dressed and left for work. It was a relatively short and painless shift, and I was soon home again, only to hear the phone ringing. Apparently, I had left my wallet at work and someone was kind enough to turn it in. However, not before my money was strategically removed.

So now I was broke and had to yet again donate my plasma. But in the middle of the life sucking session, the machine malfunctioned and was draining the blood out of my body and spewing it all over the floor. Nice. The problem was resolved and I awaited my payment. Not so fast. The person in front of me in the line decided to pass out and flop around on the floor like a trout. So I had to wait another 15 minutes for my cash, by which time it was too late to pay my phone bill.

Now, with all this turmoil going on in my own life, my hamster decided to up and die and stink up my room. So, I threw my hands in the air and did what any fed up college kid would do. I left for Aggieville.

All my sorrows were soon forgotten in the bright lights of The 'Ville and I found joy in my golden pint of bliss. It had been a long day and the bartender was my only true friend. (Actually, I kind of wierded him out, but you get the picture.) Soon, my friends joined me, pints turned to pitchers, the dancing began and I was once again stumbling around with English as my second

I awoke the next morning to a spinning room and no clothes. The bright lights of The 'Ville had faded into the piercing sunlight screaming though my window and the dance beats changed to an annoying noise in the apartment. Someone was at the door. And the phone was ringing. Here I go again. This is why I don't like summer. Table for one, please, Satan.

Safety precautions can prevent insect-borne diseases

BY APRIL MIDDLETON Kansus State Collegian

With summer in full swing and the Fourth of July just around the corner people aren't the only creatures who can't resist being outdoors.

Mike Heideman, director of public information for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said this is the time of year when people need to be aware of insects that carry diseases.

He said mosquitoes and ticks are the two that cause the most concern in this area. Although Kansas doesn't have a higher instance of insect-borne diseases than other areas, Gail Hansen, assistant state epidemiologist and state health veterinarian, said it is important to be aware that there are insects in Kansas that can harm

"I wouldn't advise people to stay indoors because of insects, but they just need to be aware that Kansas does have ticks and mosquitoes and some of them can make you sick," Hansen said.

Heideman said that prevention should be the primary concern with these insects. He suggests that people who are outdoors for long periods of time check themselves every three hours for ticks and always wear repellent to guard against mosquitoes.

'Most people who catch an insect-borne disease get it while out hiking, camping or just being out for a long time," he said. "It's important to take precautions when doing these things."

Hansen said that since different types of ticks and mosquitoes can carry different diseases, it's important to be aware of any symptoms that may occur after being bit.

The most common diseases caused by these insects are encephalitis, Lyme disease and Rocky Mountain spotted fever.

Kansas mosquitoes are known as carrier of encephalitis. About one out of 100 to 1,000 people who are bitten by an encephalitiscarrying mosquito become sick.

There are no symptoms that are specific to the disease, but high fever, headaches, fatigue and sensitivity to light are some things to watch for.

Hansen said there is no cure or vaccine for encephalitis. Those who show symptoms should see a physician.

Lyme disease is the most commonly reported disease spread by ticks in Kansas. During 2000 there were 17 confirmed reports of Lyme disease in Kansas. The ticks that carry Lyme disease are normally small, about the size of a sesame seed.

People who have bee bit by a tick should watch for a large, reddish rash around the bite area. The rash is often ring-shaped: Other symptoms such as fever, headache, fatigue, stiff neck and muscle or joint pain may be present. There is a vaccine for Lyme disease that is 80 percent effective after all doses have been given. There is also antibiotic treatment available to treat the disease.

Rocky Mountain spotted fever is also a tick-borne disease. The ticks which carry this disease are larger and often referred to as "wood ticks" or "dog ticks." In 2000, three cases of the disease were confirmed in Kansas.

It is characterized by sudden onset of fever, severe headache, fatigue, deep muscle pain, chills and rash.

Hansen said that the diseases sound scary and many people are afraid to be outdoors because of them, but they are preventable.

"It really only takes a few precautions to minimize the risks of contacting these diseases,' Hansen said. "All we have to do is be aware and be careful."

Outdoor Precautions

Goil Harsen, æsistant state epidemiologist and state health veterinarian, said

- Avoid outdoor activity between sunset and dawn. This is when mosquitoes become the most active.
- Walk in the middle of trails, away from tall grass and
- Avoid stagnant ponds.
- Wear long pants tucked into high socks, over the ankle shoes, and a long sleeved shirt tucked into pants to prevent ticks from getting to your skin, Clothing should be light-colored to make ticks more

- Do not wear perfime, cologne, or scented antiper-
- Use insect repellents, especially those with DEET, according to label instruc-
- Check yourself every three hours for ticks when outdoors for extended periods.
- Promptly remove ticks if they are found. Grasp the tick with tweezers as close to the skin as possible, and pull straight out with steady pressure. Do not crush or puncture the tick. Avoid handling the tick with bare hands. Thoroughly disinfect the area of the bite and wash hands immediately after removal. Notify a physician if the tick was not completely

Lieutenant governor may seek nomination

TOPEKA - Lt. Gov. Gary Sherrer plans to announce Friday whether he will seek the Republican nomination for governor next year.

Sherrer has scheduled a news conference for 10:30 a.m. in his Statehouse office. A two-sentence release from his staff said he would announce his intentions, but contained no other details.

Sherrer, 60, has served as lieutenant governor since May 1996, and his tenure is the longest ever. He also has served as secretary of commerce and housing since Gov. Bill Graves took office in January 1995.

Graves is serving his second four-year term, and the Kansas Constitution prevents him from running for re-election next year.

Others listed as potential Republican candidates are U.S. Reps. Jerry Moran and Todd Tiahrt, State Treasurer Tim Shallenburger, Kansas House Speaker Kent Glasscock and state GOP Chairman Mark Parkinson.

One Republican candidate, former Junction City Mayor Lloyd Parker, already has declared.

Among Democrats, Insurance Commissioner Kathleen Sebelius is considered the front-runner for the party's nomination.

Kansas drivers licenses to change this year

TOPEKA - Kansas driver's licenses are getting a new look.

The new design is similar to new license plates that motorists are being issued this year. Both feature an image of the state Capitol under a blue sky with golden stalks of wheat waving in the foreground.

The Department of Revenue also notes two other subtle changes. Licenses are issued by the department's Division of

First, "Kansas" will be in black block letters, rather than in blue script. Secondly, the secretary of revenue's signature has been updated to reflect the appointment last year of Stephen Richards to that job.

"We just want to make sure Kansas merchants are aware of the change," said Sheila Walker, director of vehicles.

Walker said her division didn't want merchants who ask to see driver's licenses as an identification check, such as liquor retailers, to be surprised by the new look.

Father legally abandons newborn at fire station

TOPEKA - A young man gave up custody of a 5-month-old boy at a Topeka fire station Sunday. one year to the day after the state's Newborn Protection Act became law.

The law that went into effect July 1, 2000, allows parents to drop off any infant up to 45 days old at any Kansas hospital, health center, health department or fire

Under the law, as long as the child is unharmed, the parents aren't charged with abandonment, which is a felony in Kansas. The law was meant to save the lives of newborns who otherwise might be left to die by parents who didn't feel they could handle parenthood.

Although the baby in this case was older than the 45 days specified by law, officials considered it in his best interest to place him in the custody of social services.

This is a prime example of what the law was intended to do," said fire department spokesman Greg Bailey.

The young man who showed up at the Topeka fire station just before noon Sunday wasn't the boy's biological father, but circumstances had made it necessary for him to be the child's caretaker, Bailey said.

The baby appeared well cared for and in excellent health, Bailey

The man had a police escort as he went from the fire station to a juvenile intake location, Bailey said.

"We're glad as a fire department that the person chose to exercise this option and not other, more drastic options," he

Costa Rican officials work to solve murder

LAWRENCE - A Costa Rican official says solving the murder of a University of Kansas student is a "top priority" for his government.

Jaime Daremblum, the Costa Rican ambassador to the United States, told the Lawrence Journal-World on Friday that official concern about the stabbing death of Shannon Martin is "extremely high."

"We attach top priority to solving homicide cases in Costa Rica," Daremblum said.

Martin, 23, was killed May 13 in Golfito, Costa Rica, where she was completing biological research a few days before she was scheduled to graduate from Kansas

No arrests have been made, but several suspects have been questioned and had hair samples taken. Officials apparently seek a match to hair believed to be from her assailant, which was found clutched in Martin's hand. The hair samples were to be carried by a Costa Rican official in a diplomatic pouch to the FBI Crime Lab in Washington, D.C., said Martin Matamoros, a translator for the Organization of Judicial Investigation, the Costa Rican equivalent of the FBI.

Matamoros said he was unsure how long the testing would take.

Martin's mother, Jeanette Stauffer, of Topeka, said she has heard conflicting reports about the investigation.

"I've been in touch with people from Golfito, and they're not seeing anything being done locally," she said. "It's just been kind of shoved under the rug."

Merger may be terminated due to possible regulation violation

BY DAVE CARPENTER

The Associated Press

CHICAGO - United Airlines and US Airways said Monday they are in discussions to abandon their planned $4.3 billion merger, which has bogged down over economic and regulatory concerns.

The announcement came after a person familiar with the approval said UAL Corp.-owned United is dropping the acquisition because the carrier is convinced the merger won't win regulatory approval.

"UAL Corporation and US Airways Group Inc. have confirmed that they are in discussions regarding the possibility of terminating the proposed merger between the two companies prior to the Aug. 1 termination date," the airlines said.

The companies said they would make no further comment for the time being

Airline industry consultant Michael Boyd called the merger's long-expected demise "good for everybody."

"It's good for United because it can focus on its real business challenges. It's good for US Air because they can focus on being a stand-alone carrier. And it's good for the consumer, who won't lose a lot of competition because of the merger." said Boyd, president of the Boyd Group in Evergreen, Colo.

>< >< >< >< >< >< >< ><

A source familiar with the matter, speaking on condition of anonymity, said United informed US Airways on Friday that it wanted to discuss terminating the 13-month-old agree-

United, the nation's secondlargest airline, will have to pay US Airways a $50 million breakup fee if it ends the agreement after Aug. 1. Before that date, the breakup fee is substantially higher, but United is asking to pay only $50 million.

Experts had been expecting the deal to fall through because of antitrust concerns, said Ray Neidl, an analyst with ABN Amro Inc.

Other major airlines probably would not be interested in trying to buy US Airways because they would face the same regulatory scrutiny with little chance of overcoming it, he Helane Becker, an airlines analyst with Buckingham Research Group, added there clearly was "no way" the deal was going through.

"It was taking too long and there was no way the Justice Department would approve it," she said.

In an effort to ease anticompetitive concerns and ensure government approval, United agreed in January to sell some US Airways assets to American Airlines, including half of US Airways' Washington-New York-Boston shuttle.

A weakening economy is also hurting UAL, and the airline has become reluctant to engage in a costly, complicated merger.

United signed a contract with its pilots last year on the assumption the merger would be approved.

The pact gave pilots 45 percent raises over four years.

United reported a worse-than-million on revenues of $4.42 billion and has already said it expects a double-digit decline in revenue for the second quarter. United would have paid $4.3

expected first quarter loss of $313 billion in cash for US Airways shares, or about $60 a share, nearly triple the amount of US Airways' current stock Neidl said the wide spread between the US Airways' share price and what United was going to pay was a clear sign that the deal was in "The market was pretty much discounting any takeover," he said.

Napster available for paying customers only

SAN JOSE, Calif. - Napster's song-sharing service was offline Monday as it worked to transform itself into a music company for paying customers.

Napster did not say when its computer servers would come back online, and it was not clear exactly how the down time related to Napster's planned launch of a subscription service, promised for later this summer.

The company has also been upgrading its music-identification system to better comply with court orders that it prevent unauthorized music-swapping.

Napster representatives did not immediately return calls for

The service was sued by leading record companies for copyright infringement for allowing computer users to swap songs for free.

As a result, it is transforming itself into a fee-based system that will pay royalties to the artists.

Napster is testing "fingerprinting technology" for the company's planned commercial service, said Matt Bailey, an analyst with Webnoize, an Internet research firm.

The new fee-based Napster has been promised before summer's end by German media giant Bertelsmann AG, Napster's primary financial backer.

Napsters chat rooms were still working Monday and were mostly filled with people complaining that they could not download songs.

While Napster makes changes to its system, users are logging on elsewhere for free music.

At its peak, in February, Napster had an average of 1.57 million simultaneous users.

Hollywood TV, film actors seek higher salaries

LOS ANGELES - On their second day without a contract, Hollywood actors remained optimistic Monday that they could reach a deal without a strike that could shut down TV and movie production.

Negotiators for the Screen Actors Guild and American Federation of Television and Radio Artists resumed bargaining Monday morning after adjourning shortly before midnight.

The old contract expired Sunday at 12:01 a.m.

AFTRA spokeswoman Pamm Fair said the marathon bargaining signaled that progress was being made. "The fact that we're still here indicates there's a reason to still be here," she said.

"We all want to get a deal as soon as we possibly can," said Barry Liden, spokesman for the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers.

Both sides said they remain committed to reaching a new contract that would avoid a damaging walkout.

The parties have adhered to a news blackout and have not given details about negotiations.

The unions represent 135,000 actors. The actors are seeking higher

Court rules lesbians can sue university

BY JOEL STASHENKO

The Associated Press ALBANY, N.Y. - A medical school's policy of allowing married students - but not homosexual couples to share college housing may violate New York City anti-discrimination laws, the state's highest court ruled Monday.

The Court of Appeals ruled that two lesbian students should be allowed to sue Yeshiva University for bias based on sexual orientation. The women contended they were unfairly prohibited from living with their female partners in college-subsidized housing.

The decision overturned two lower courts, which found that the college's policy was not discriminatory because it applied not only to homosexual couples but also to unmarried heterosexual couples. The Court of Appeals sent the case back to a trial court.

The lesbian students, Sara Levin and Maggie Jones, have graduated from Yeshiva University's Albert Einstein College of Medicine in the Bronx.

Yeshiva spokeswoman Hedy Shulman said the college's lawyers were reviewing the decision and had no immediate comment.

The case is being pursued by the American Civil Liberties Union, the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund and other antidiscrimination groups.

"We think it's a fantastic opinion," said ACLU lawyer James Esseks. "We have been trying for a long time to get courts to recognize that when an entity gives out benefits - such as housing or health care - and says married people can get them and unmarried people cannot, that may be discrimination based on sexual orientation."

Levin and Jones did not specify damages they are seeking in their claim, but Esseks said it would entail the amount they paid in rent by maintaining non-subsidized housing while attending the Briendenthal, who officially took over the head coaching duties from Slough yesterday, comes from Colorado State as well.

Briendenthal holds a teaching certificate in Equine Science from CSU, and has a successful past in the world of equestrian, Lon Floyd, development officer and equestrian administrator said.

"We at K-State are fortunate in being able to hire Lindsay to lead our varsity team," he said.

"She is very knowledgeable about equitation and brings youth and boundless energy to the program. We feel she is an excellent fit for Kansas State." Briendenthal qualified for the American Quarter Horse Association World Championships from 1993-2000 and won the Amateur

Trail event at the All-American

Ouarter Horse Congress in 1999.

Although she has never been at the head of a national equestrian program, Briendenthal has coached the Western team at CSU and organized some of the Rams' horse shows and equestrian budget.

"I am looking forward to coming to Kansas State," Briendenthal said.

"I'm looking forward to a great season with the team and taking the equestrian program to the highest level I can.

Briendenthal is the first new head coach at K-State in new athletics director Tim Weiser's time with the school.

slack, provide make up the slack.

"We keep it small so we can accommodate the customer," he said. "We like to get to know the people that come in, and we want to understand which products they like and why."

This year, artillery simulators and light shows seem to be on the top of everyone's shopping list, Loucks said.

"The Dixie Repeater sells fast," he said. "It shoots off 120 shots and by the time it's done, it has made a lot of noise and put on a pretty good light show."

Discounts and special packages are also offered at the stand.

"We try to keep our prices competitive," Frank Thompson, firefighter, said, "but we also try and make some profit. That is where the specials come in."

Currently, if a customer buys $20 worth of fireworks, they will receive $20 worth free

"This helps out families a lot," Bob Loucks said. "It gets them a lot of fireworks for a cheaper price." The firefighters said they hope to open the stand again next year.

"It has became a tradition," Bob Loucks said. "People look for us every year and plus we have to much fun to not open again.

A PORTION OF THE ENTERTAINMENT

Stephen Parks, senior in marketing, was part of the entertainment for the festivities.

Parks was the bass player in the band previously named, "King Friday." However, the band recently found out that there was another band with the same name, so they changed their name to "Mercury Faith Band."

The Mercury Faith Band consists of Parks, Jeremy Woods, senior in wildlife biology and Aaron Wisebender, May 2001 graduate. The band played some cover songs and also one they wrote titled, "Sang A Song.

Parks said he was impressed with how the audience responded to their performance.

"It was pretty warm. I didn't expect it to be as warm as it was," he said. "A lot of people go into it, so we we're pretty happy about it."

CHENEY

The device works like any other pacemaker by assuring that his heart does not beat too slowly. When it detects the beat slowing below a certain level, it sends a mild electric charge to pace the beat at a minimum level.

More dramatically, if the heart suddenly surges to a dangerous, highspeed beat, the defibrillator kicks in. It sends an electrical jolt to the lower chamber of the heart and causes it to slow down. Sometimes this will cause the heart to slow too much, and that is when the pacemaker turns on and adjusts the rhythm.

That jolt could be jarring for Cheney, said Dr. Douglas Zipes, president of the American College of Cardiology and an authority on irregular heart rhythms who has consulted with the vice president's doctors.

"That is something he will feel, and patients describe it anywhere from a giant hiccup to a mule kick in the chest," Zipes said on "Fox News Sunday."

"With an electric shock, it contracts all of the muscles, not just the heart but the chest muscles, too," Zipes said. "Yes, it's recognizable.

Cheney's personal cardiologist has said there was less than a 10 percent chance that the defibrillator will be needed to calm Cheney's heart. Asked how the device will affect Cheney's daily life, Zipes said, "Probably not at all."

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., said he had no doubts about Chency's ability to serve in his job.

"Obviously this has been a matter that the vice president's had to contend with for many years," Daschle said on ABC's "This Week." "He's done it successfully, and I have every expectation he'll continue to do so."

House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., told CBS' "Face the Nation" that Cheney has been "very, very vigorous in carrying out his office, and I expect him to continue to do

Nutrition Notes Grill It Lean!

Nothing is better than a summer BBQ - especially if that BBQ is healthful, lean meat. Grilling lean meat like flank steaks, round steak, venison or buffalo results in a delicious healthful meal if you plan ahead. Tenderize lean meat before you put it on the grill. Low-fat italian dressing, lite soy sauce, lemon juice mixed with boullion, or even a little beer works nicely. You can tenderize over night or for a few hours. Lean meat cooks more quickly, so keep an eye on the meat as you grill.

Blood drive begins today

BY JAMIE BARRETT

Kansas State Collegian

Students, faculty and staff are being given an opportunity to save a life for two days at the K-State Student Union.

The American Red Cross will be holding a blood

Blood al: 100 Units drive from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today and Thursday, in the Cottonwood Room of the Union. Stacey Huerter, K-State Red Cross Blood Drive student coordinator, said the blood drive was planned this summer to encourage summer students and faculty to give blood.

'We always have our big blood drives in the fall and spring here at K-

State," Huerter said. "This drive's purpose is to catch the students and faculty that may not have the time to do it during the busier semesters. We are trying to catch them on their down time.

Huerter said the fall and spring drives have a goal of 850 units of blood. She said since this drive is smaller, it will have a goal of 50 units a day, totaling 100 units.

"We only have a few appointments right now," Huerter said. "We usually have a great turnout though and we take walk-ins as well as appointments."

Nancy Powell, K-State Red Cross representative, said this is the first time the Red Cross has had a drive at K-State during the summer.

'We normally just have the two per year," Powell said. "There is a critical need for blood and donations are lower in the summer months. We thought if we had a blood drive it would make it more convenient for donors in the summer."

Powell said this drive will be different than the fall and spring drives because there will not be the traditional competition with the University of Kansas.

"During our other drives we make it a sort of competition between the two schools," Powell said. "This summer drive is just for K-State though," Huerter said another difference is that there will be a drawing for a DVD player during this drive. She said that anyone who comes in to donate can sign up, regardless of whether they can donate or not.

"The DVD giveaway is not dependent on the donation," Huerter said. "We want to do what we can to get people to come in and donate."

Powell said the blood donations are in demand right now and the Red Cross hopes the K-State community will recognize that.

"We have always had great responses from K-State and the Manhattan community," Powell said. "We are hoping to generate interest so people recognize our

Aggieville safety concern for cop

BY APRIL MIDDLETON Knossa State University

It's Friday night, and officer Kevin Walter knows where to find a good portion of K-State's student body. He'll walk alongside them in Aggieville and bump into them as he makes his way through the bars.

Walter is one of the two Riley County police officers assigned to patrol Aggieville on foot. Another officer is on-call if the two assigned officers are busy.

With so many people in a relatively small area, Walter said safety is always a concern.

"In an area like Aggieville, where we're dealing with a very dense, young crowd and alcohol there are bound to be some problems," Walter said. "People will do things on Friday night they'd never do on Monday

Walter said the majority of the problems he sees in Aggieville are minor issues between two people that escalate into a fight.

His advice to Aggieville patrons is to walk away. "Ninety-five percent of the people here just want to have fun. The other 5 percent are looking for trouble," Walter said. "If someone bumps into you, walk away. If someone says something to you, walk away. Most of the time it will keep you out of trouble."

Walter said he realizes that advice is easier said than done and sometimes it just doesn't work. That's when his duties as a police officer come into play.

Walter said he does his part to try to keep the environment safe by patrolling the area, however, bar owners, bouncers and students are expected to do their part also.

Mike Closson, manager at 12th Street Pub, said they maintain a safe environment in their bar by making sure there is enough staff on duty to take care of

Postal Service decides to continue current delivery system

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - The Postal Service has decided to continue delivering mail six days a week.

Facing losses that could approach $2 billion this fiscal year, the agency had been considering cutting back to five days, eliminating Saturday deliv-

But, after a preliminary study, the postal Board of Governors decided to drop the plan.

"After reviewing management's primary findings, examining five-day delivery, the board decided to continue with existing six-day delivery service," Robert F. Rider, board chairman, said at the group's meeting in Evansville, Ind., Tuesday.

The threat of a cutback had drawn heavy criticism from Congress, the mailing industry and the public One member of Congress had called the plan a mistake that could destroy the agency. "This is one of the most selfdefeating proposals I've heard in my life," Rep. Bob Barr, R-Ga., said at a hearing in April. "If there's one thing the Postal Service could do that would guarantee its demise, it's eliminate service on Saturday.'

The agency has halted most construction and made other cuts to ease the losses caused by the shrinking economy and the sharp increases in the cost of gasoline.

Rep. Constance Morella, R-Md., argued that "reducing the number of delivery days will have a devastating impact on our economy." Sam Parmelee, a vice president of the National Rural Letter Carriers Association, said reduced service could cause other problems. "The day you don't deliver mail it stacks up," said Parmelee, whose group represents about 100,000 rural and suburban carriers. "Then you've got this huge volume of mail that some carriers won't be able to fit in their vehicles when they go out on

Robert McLean, director of the Virginia-based Mailers Council, a coalition of mailing businesses, said the agency must "find ways of managing within its current legislative framework to reduce expenses."

The Postal Service receives no taxpayer money for its operations.

It remains a government agency and operates under laws set by Congress.

According to the annual report on estimated accidents in the home, from Britain's Department of Trade and Industry, three dozen people were sent to the hospital for injuries associated with teapot covers; about 165 for injuries from placemats, about 330 from toilet-paper holders and about 13,000 from vegetables.

However, sponge-related accidents fell from 996 the previous year to 787 and only 329 injuries from meat cleavers were

Imprisoned murderer earns full salary as state employee

Ms. Vermont Elaine Beverly, 47, is likely the only imprisoned murderer in the United States who earns a full salary and benefits as an ordinary state employee.

Because Beverly scored high on a state test and because the Alabama Vocational Rehabilitation Office is required to hire highscorers, she spends days on the job and returns to her Birmingham cell at night. Much of her salary is remitted to the state.

Sibilings give birth to baby to receive mother's estate

In Draguignan, France, a 62-year-old woman identified only as Jeanine gave birth to a boy in May, after in-vitro fertilization.

She is not the oldest woman to give birth, but she is the oldest to give birth using sperm from her own brother. The two hid the brother's identity from doctors so they could qualify to receive their mother's estate, which would have gone to others if the siblings had been childless.

Massachusetts foots costly bill for child's schooling

Federal law guarantees every child a public education, no matter how extensive his special needs (or how costly), but Massachusetts could not find any school to take Nathan Vincent, 15, at any price. Because of his severe physical and intellectual limitations placing him was a difficult task, and a self-mutilation problem, until one school in New Hampshire accepted him in April after a 10-month search.

During the 10 months the state picked up the bill for him to stay, without schooling, at Children's Hospital in Boston, which came to $619,000, or the equivalent of the annual salaries of a dozen teachers.

Strange tidbits...

Alejandro Toledo was elected president of Peru despite his campaign explanation that the reason he once failed a drug test was because he had been kidnapped by intelligence agents and force-fed cocaine

Harvard medical school professor Dirk Greineder was convicted of murdering his wife, despite his unwavering explanation that the reason the couple's blood was all over him was because they both coincidentally came down with nosebleeds on the morning of the wife's death.

And a 39-year-old motorist in Bismarck, N.D., stopped by police for having illegal tinting on her truck's windshield, told them it must have been the work of a free-lancer who broke in and tinted the windows without her knowledge.

A Malaysian education official, wary of the teacher shortage, urged female teachers to plan any pregnancies so that babies are delivered during school vacations.

A Kentucky man notified a convenience store clerk in person that he would be back in a half-hour to rob him, then loitered outside the store for 30 minutes before returning and robbing him.

Student workers endure heat, experts say more will come

BY JESSICA PITTS Kansas State Collegian

When Jason Dunlap and Dan Willems accepted summer internships they didn't think about working during high temperatures. "It was a shock at first," Dunlap, senior in construction science, said. "I worked outside originally, but I have been doing a lot of work inside now, which, of course, I like a lot better.'

Dunlap, who works for Coonrod Associates, and Willems, who is employed by GE Johnson, are currently assigned to construction on the new K-State Alumni Center.

"We mostly do surveying and onsite inspections," Willems, senior in construction science, said. "Lately, a lot of the work has been inside."

The men said when they were working outside taking frequent breaks became necessary.

"We made sure we had lots of water and were in the shade as much as possible," Dunlap said.

Because of the high temperatures, the companies have altered their work schedules in order to keep their employees healthy.

"We are working shorter days now," Willems said. "Instead of having an afternoon break, most of the workers are done by 3 or 3:30 p.m. It helps escape the heat of the

Although high temperatures are a normal factor of Kansas summers, Mary Knapp, state climatologist, said this summer has taken a turn in a different direction.

"We still have the high temperatures, but the big difference is the low temperatures," Knapp said. "People are feeling the stress of the temperatures because the low temperatures are staying warm. The impact is more noticeable when the high temperatures hang around.

On July 7, Manhattan recorded a high temperature of 100 degrees. which is normal for this time of year, Knapp said. However, the low for the day was only 83 degrees.

"That is an extremely high low," she said. "Residents are really going to feel the stress when the low temperatures don't provide any relief from the hot daytime temperatures."

While the high temperatures may not be pleasurable for many, local business are benefiting from the Gary Schwandt, pool manager at CiCo Park, said that they have seen a huge increase of patrons within the last two weeks.

"Yesterday we had over 700 people at the pool," Schwandt said. "We always see some increase in July, but this year seems more extreme."

Schwandt said people are also coming in more on the evenings to "We definitely have an increase in the evenings," he said. "The temperature is still hot enough that people can cool down by swimming.

Mike Hufnagel, owner of Dairy

Dan Willems and Jason Dunlap, seniors in construction science, inspect a beam that was placed yesterday at the main entrance of the future Alumni Center south of the Old Stadium. The temperatures have been in the triple digits all week and the lows for the day have been higher than normal. The high temperatures require people working outside to take many breaks and drink lots of water.

Queen Brazier, said that high temperatures also effect their business.

"Hot weather is ice cream weather," Hufnagel said. "There is no dispute about that.

However, Hufnagel said how high the temperatures are also determines when customers come in.

"We have noticed that the hotter the day is, the less customers we have come in during the day," he said. "A lot of them will wait until the evening to get ice cream. I think a lot of them just don't want to fight the weather."

Knapp said she doesn't expect a break in the temperatures anytime

"I think we will ride this all the way into August," she said. "It's normal, summertime weather."

New ticket package at McCain offers discount

BY ALYSON RALETZ

Kansan State Collegian

McCain Auditorium is offering a more affordable student ticket option this year for the upcoming McCain Performance Series.

Students are able to reserve the $25 subscription package, which includes five preselected shows now at the McCain Box Office. In past semesters, students have received a 50 percent discount off of the public individual ticket price and a varied discount off of the entire series

These discounts will still be available, McCain Director Richard Martin said, but this new student subscription brings the entertainment to student who are overwhelmed by the series' 18 events.

"We realize going to some of these performances is like going to a foreign planet or foreign country for some of our students," Martin said.

He said this option provides a broad range of entertainment while offering a more reasonable number of performances for students to Jana Slattery, senior in business marketing, attended the Nutcracker in last year's Performance Series. Slattery said she enjoyed the show, but said she was not interested in the other performances in the series because they were too expensive.

The $25 package is more economically appealing, she said.

"It really sounds worth it for just $25, but I definitely want to pick my own shows," she said. "I would be a lot more interested if they let me pick the shows I wanted to see."

Most of the preselected performances are the more popular selections, but students might not be so eager for the other performances in the package, he said.

"It's kind of like sitting down to a table and noticing these little brown and red things and you try them and find out they are caviar," he said. "It's like that with the other shows. Just try them. You might like them."

SAID

Why can't we just be friends?

Can men and women be friends? Of course they can. The more complex question remains, can men and women IUST be friends?

In the newsroom the topic came up and we decided to tackle it and by having two people of different genders, who happen to be very good friends, attempt to determine the answer to this question.

Erin- I have more male friends than female friends and up until a few months ago I thought that it was possible that men and women could just be friends and nothing more. However, something happened a while back that made me question my stance.

One of my guy friends, who I have always had hidden feelings for but have been too scared to admit it, introduced me to his girlfriend. A jealous pang came over me. I looked at her as if she was competition. I suddenly took full notice of all of the little things about him. His beautiful eyes. His kind smile. And even though I will never do anything to break them up, part of me was envious that he no longer was single. I felt horrible about this, like Julia Roberts in "My Best Friend's Wedding."

Matt- I never dated anyone during my high school years and have only dated two girls since. Instead, I have made many friends of the opposite sex. The way in which my first relationship ended has scared me from wanting to be in a serious relationship. I fear that I will lose the friendship we have if we date. I don't get into fights with my friends, we might have discussions or disagree on something, but never fight. Both my girlfriends and I have been in many fights, those are not fun.

Erin-Whenever I start to think that a guy and I have just made it to the level of being friends with no romantic feelings attached usually something happens. I either start to have feelings for him or vice versa. There is rarely a completely platonic relationship.

Matt-Everybody that I have had made it to the friends level with I have never had romantic feelings towards. Ok, maybe a few times but never a strong enough of a feeling to act upon.

Erin - I think that when you are just friends with someone then you can act like yourself. You can wear your pig boxers, you can tell corny jokes and you can watch baseball games with them and yell crazy comments at the top of your lungs to the umps. You never worry about how you look or if your legs are shaved.

The guys act completely like themselves as well. They are proud of the fact that they can burp the alphabet. The conversations between us are amazing because we can talk about everything from Maxim to art. When I am with a guy friend I am completely myself and there is nothing that I hold back. Thus, they know who I really am and vice versa.

Matt-1 agree. My best female friend and I have known each other for many years and we have dated others without being jealous of the other's partner. The terms on which we met and the way in which we got to know each other have led > us to be the best of friends and not have any romantic feelings toward one another. She has seen me at my worst and vise versa. If we don't talk for a few weeks, or even months, not a big deal. I know she'll be there if I ever need an ear.

Erin - When you are dating someone it is easy to let your friends of the opposite sex slip away. The entire jealousy factor from your significant other often plays a factor.

As Billy Crystal put it in the movie "When Harry Met Sally, "They can't be friends . . . unless both of them are involved with other people. Then they can."

He continued, "This is an amendment to the earlier rule. If the two people are in relationships, the pressure of possible involvement is lifted. That doesn't work either. Because what happens then is the person you're involved with can't understand why you need to be friends with the person you're just friends with. It's like it means something is missing from the relationship and you wanted to go outside the relationship to get it. Then when you say, 'No, no, no, no, it's not true, nothing is missing from the relationship,' the person you're involved with then accuses you of being secretly attracted to the person you're just friends with. Which you probably are - I mean, come on, who the hell are we kidding, let's face it. Which

back to the earlier rule before the amendment, which is men

His view

Matt Stamey can't be

However, having friends of the opposite sex is essential to everything in

Matt- In both of my relationships, my girlfriends have been jealous of my good friend of the opposite sex. The jealousy has been a major factor in our decision to breakup. I realize that they will have guy friends and I do get a little jealous, but I never say anything about it. I figure that it is not a reason to be jealous and that they probably met him long before I was even in her picture.

Erin - Thinking back on all of my failed relationships there have been a common theme. I have never been friends with someone before I started dating them. I didn't get to know who they were or what they stood for, instead I would try to rush in and figure out who we were and what we stood for.

Friendship should be the base of every relationship. Dana Scully, from the X-Files once said, "Well, it seems to me that the best relationships, the ones that last, are frequently the ones that are rooted in friendship. You know, one day you look at the person and you see something more than you did the night before. Like a switch has been flicked somewhere. And the person who was just a friend is . . suddenly the only person you can ever imagine yourself with."

Matt-1 think that is why I don't have too many serious relationships. I became good friends with a girl and don't want, or don't have the guts to become serious with her. I value friendship and don't want to lose any of the friends I have made.

Erin-1 agree. I value my guy friends to the point that I wouldn't want to jeopardize anything with them by starting a relationship. So, the question remains, can men and women JUST be friends?

Matt - You bet. Erin - They can be friends, but it is a rare and beautiful thing to be IUST friends.

Working out too much can lead to obesession

This summer I have been going to bed earlier than most small children and waking up before the sun. I call it obsession.

Each morning as I drag my bed raggled ass out of bed at 5:45 a.m. cursing myself all the while as I pile my water bottle, my handy headset, student ID and half-awake butt into my truck and drive to the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex.

As hard as it is to resist the urge to roll over in the morning and hit the snooze button, I know that if I don't make it to the Rec at 6 a.m., then I won't make it at all that day. That thought, of not making it to the Rec, of missing more than one day a week, is what makes me addicted. It is my psychotic obses-

My freshmen year I began going to the Rec with a good friend. We were bound and determined not to gain the freshmen 15. So we started going to Step Aerobics a few days a week. My first two years my semi devoted work-out schedule was something I was proud of. An hour a day was enough.

But somewhere the trail of sweat changed from an hour of jumping around the aerobics room four days a week, to six days a week

hard-core cross training.
Biking.
swimming.
running, lifting.
Somewhere along the line the simple of full-on,

pride of just kinda being in shape was lost and my obsession, my addiction to sweating took over.

For the last several years I have realized that for me working out is an addiction. I began to realize that this overindulgence, pure vanity thing I do daily is something I do more often than go to church. But it is probably the healthiest thing I do for myself as well.

After expressing some personal concerns to a close friend of mine who spent the semester studying the Rec culture, I realized I was not the only one stuck in the middle of the road on this issue. I was not the only one who found themselves wondering how much working out is too much?

Working out like an eating disorder is a form of control. Lets face it, chaos abounds and any more it seems like there is little one can do to really control our surroundings and environment. I believe there is such a thing as obesity discrimination out there. For me, rather than turning to an eating disorder to keep me from gaining weight, I turned to the Rec. The Rec is my form of control for staying within the bounds of what is accepted in our culture. For the longest time it kept me sane — but it began driving me insane.

In this time of me, me, me, where we learn to seek and meet our immediate wants and needs at all times, I have observed we tend to do things to the constant extreme. From drinking, to smoking to eating too much or watching too much TV, or even working too much, it seems only natural for us to work out to the extreme.

Many would and should argue that working out to an extreme is a much more positive thing than any other vice out there. I have to believe that too much of a good thing is still too much. And when it starts to take over your life or you feel bad for not making it to the Rec for two days in a row, that is too much.

Facing my demons full throttle I am realizing that there is only so much I can control, myself- my body and the environment.

Although I work hard to stay in shape whenever I begin to wonder or freak out about an extra pound or a missed trip to the Rec, I snap out of my self indulged, vanity-driven world and realize a body is just a body. Although it might be the vehicle I carry myself through this world in, there is still a lot inside that won't turn to mush even if my muscles do. Maybe I should not be so hard pressed to worry about such silly matters.

Philippino president arraigned yesterday

MANILA, Philippines -Ousted President Joseph Estrada was arraigned Tuesday on the capital offense of economic plunder inside the imposing courthouse he once called a symbol of his tough campaign against corruption.

Despite last-minute attempts to quash or delay the case on constitutional grounds, the courts stood firm on trying the former action film star-turnedpolitician accused of taking millions of dollars in bribes and kickbacks during 31 months in

KINGSTON, Jamaica -Soldiers in trucks and armored cars took to the streets with orders to halt violence between law enforcers and opposition party supporters that has left at least 20 people dead in three days.

Prime Minister P.J. Patterson called out the army Monday night. It was not clear how many soldiers were involved. They mainly moved into the streets in the capital, Kingston, as helicopters hovered overhead.

Patterson said they also would deploy in other hotspots around the Caribbean country. The military was given police powers, mostly to maintain cordons and enforce curlews, he added. Leaders of Jamaica's two mainpolitical parties - Patterson and Labor Party leader Edward Seaga accused the other of inciting the violence ahead of general elections scheduled to take place before the end of next year.

Palestinian refugees' homes, shops bulldozed

RAFAH REFUGEE CAMP, Gaza Strip — Israeli army bulldozers demolished three dozen homes and shops in a Palestinian refugee camp early Tuesday, triggering a two-hour hattle with Palestinian gunmen and sending civilians running for cover, some still in their pajamas.

Five Palestinians and three Israeli soldiers were wounded. Palestinians said it was the first major incursion into Palestinian territory since a U.S.-brokered truce was declared last month.

Israel denied the claim, saying it has security control over the part of the Rafah refugee camp where the homes were knocked down because it borders the Israeli-Egyptian border and is close to military installations.

SANTIAGO, Chile Demonstrators protested a decision to spare Gen. Augusto Pinochet from standing trial on human rights charges, calling it an injustice to the thousands killed by his military.

Human rights group works to end torture

MEXICO CITY - A major human rights group is urging new President Vicente Fox to take stronger measures against torture in Mexico, saying the practice remains widespread.

"It can be found at all levels of Mexico's federal, state and municipal system of administration." Amnesty International said in a report made public Tuesday.

Fox took office on Dec. 1. ending 71 years of single-party rule in Mexico.

He immediately vowed to clean up Mexico's long-notorious human rights record. The report said, "Confronting torture and abolishing the practice in Mexico is an objective which no government has yet achieved."

Ivory coast minister chosen to lead group

LUSAKA, Zambia - The Organization of African Unity chose the Ivory Coast's foreign minister, Amara Essy, to lead the group during its yearlong transformation into the African Union, a diplomat said Tuesday.

Essy, Ivory Coast's former ambassador to the United Nations, was elected secretarygeneral of the OAU in the eighth round of balloting late Monday after the other two candidates withdrew, said Charles Kibelloh, permanent secretary in Tanzania's Foreign Ministry.

Current Secretary-General Salim Ahmed Salim, who led the organization for three four-year terms, was expected to announce Essy's election later Tuesday, the second-day of the OAU's final leadership summit.

City park is scene for Arts in the Park

Kansas Stary Collegias

The City Park stage becomes an inexpensive entertainment spot throughout the summer with the Department of Parks and Recreation Arts in the Park program

In its 25th season, Arts in the Park's stage has been graced with a variety of acts including Beatles Yesterday, a Beatles Tribute band, The Benders, an oldies band, and Ruskabank, an alternative band.

Currently, "Once Upon a Mattress," the musical version of the story "The Princess and the Pea," is being performed.

Chad Pape, musical director, said the 12 through 18-year-old cast members have been working on the musical since the beginning of June.

Pape said the musical is extremely funny and well known. He said the cast has put a lot of work into the production.

"The kids have put a huge amount of effort into this," he said Melanie Godsey, recreation supervisor, said the purpose for the "It is an opportunity for us to provide good family entertainment."

> Melanie Godsey, recreation supervisor event is centered around the family. "It is an opportunity for us to provide good family entertainment," she said.

The events usually bring in an estimated 2,000 people. Godsey said the larger shows bring in around 5,000 people and the smaller shows, which often feature local talent, bring in around 500 to 1,000 audience members.

Godsey said the department tries to bring in a variety of acts.

"We really try to bring in a large variety that appeals to the entire population," she said.

Ivan Wilkinson, recreation superintendent, said the budget restraints also play a factor in what acts are brought in. Wilkinson said determining which acts will play and when they will perform can be a lengthy process, similar to putting together a puzzle.

Wilkinson said they did not change the idea or even how the events are carried out this year, but improvements were made with new lighting and sound equipment.

The best thing about the events, Wilkinson said, are their price. With the exception of the upcoming musical, "Once Upon a Mattress," everything is free.

"Listening to music in a relaxed atmosphere is ideal," Wilkinson

Audience members can bring blankets, lawn chairs, choose to sit in the bleachers or dance in front of

"This gives you a variety of options on how you can participate in the events," he said.

Wilkinson said he is extremely impressed with how Godsey has been able to help produce this level of entertainment for the community in her first year as recreation supervisor.

She really has her heart in it and I think that makes it even more special," he said.

Condit to allow search

The Associated Press

MODESTO, Calif. - Rep. Gary Condit has offered to let investigators search his apartment, review his phone records, interview his staff and even take a sample of his DNA to help find a missing Washington intern, his lawyer said.

But attorney Abbe Lowell stopped short of saving Condit would take the lie detector test requested Monday by the mother of Chandra Levy, the missing intern from Modesto who was last seen April 30.

"Mr. Condit has not been very truthful to me up to now," Susan Levy said Monday.

Condit had denied having an affair with Levy, a former U.S. Bureau of Prisons intern. But over the weekend, a source speaking on condition of anonymity said Condit, in histhird interview with Washington police and the FBI, told investigators for the first time that he had a romantic relationship with Levy, 24.

Susan Levy said she wants Condit to submit to a polygraph exam in efforts to find her daughter, even though Washington police have said Condit, 53, is not a suspect in the intern's disappearance.

Lowell said that if police ask about a lie detector test he would discuss it with Condit. He said he doesn't believe polygraph tests are generally

"The congressman will provide whatever additional information or material he can to police," Lowell

As new details emerge and Condit refers questions to a growing number of handlers, the once solid support he cultivated in California's farm belt seems to be slipping. "He's let me down," said Elaine Tindle, 67. "He was really so good and I had confidence in him. He's lost my confidence."

Each morning, Tindle and three other women walk laps at a mall as they discuss the news of the day. Lately the topic has been Condit, and the group thinks the six-term Democrat ought to resign, Tindle said.

In addition to his relationship to Levy, Condit has been accused of having a 10-month affair with a flight attendant, and his wife has been questioned by investigators looking into Levy's disappearance.

"I feel like he's got nothing to do with her disappearance, but all this other stuff coming out has put a black mark on him." Tindle said.

Others see an attempt by the media to bring down a local hero.

"I think they ought to find something out before they start persecuting him," said Iim Pilchard, an 84-year-old from Condit's hometown of Ceres.

ATTENTION SOUTHWESTERN BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY CUSTOMERS

Proposed Monthly Basic Telephone Rate Increase

Southwestern Bell Telephone Company and the United Telephone Companies of Kansas d/b/a Sprint, along with the Staff of the Kansas Corporation Commission, AT&T Communications of the Southwest, Inc., and Sprint Communications Company, L.P., have filed a Stipulation and Agreement with the Kansas Corporation Commission. If the Stipulation and Agreement is approved, rates for toll calls within Kansas would be reduced. Sprint Long Distance projects, that over the term of the agreement, its intrastate long distance prices would decrease between 15 and 22 percent over January 1, 2001, levels. AT&T estimates that it will reduce rates on leading consumer offers by nearly 30 percent. Southwestern Bell customers would see their monthly basic telephone bills increase beginning October 1, 2001. For residential service the increase would range from $1.65 to $2.00 per month. Business customers would see an increase ranging from $0.85 to $2.50 per month. Commission staff calculates that a Southwestern Bell customer would need to make 89 minutes of toll calls per month to break even.

Stipulation proposals currently, for SWBT customers, monthly basic rates and charges for "touchtone" are separated on the customer's monthly bill. Under the Stipulation and Agreement, touchtone charges are to be rolled into the basic monthly rate. Most customers currently have touchtone service and charges are $1.15 per month. Residential rates, without touchtone, range from $12.30 to $14.55 per month. With the proposed increase and touchtone included in the basic rate, the proposed rates for residential monthly basic service would increase to a range of $15.45 to $17.35 per month. For Basehor customers with optional EAS, rates would increase to $22.35 per month from the current Basic business monthly rates, without touchtone, range from $16.75 to $29.95 per month. With the proposed increase and touchtone included in the basic rate, the proposed rates for basic business monthly service could increase to a range of $22.25 to $33.80 per month. For Basehor business customers with optional EAS, rates would increase to $41.25 per month from the current rate of $36.25 per month.

The Commission will accept written comments from Southwestern Bell customers through Friday, August 24, 2001. Comments regarding the case should reference Docket No. 01-GIMT-082-GIT and be sent to the KCC Office of Public Affairs and Consumer Protection, 1500 SW Arrowhead Road, Topeka, Kansas, 66604. Comments may also be submitted by email at public.affairs@kcc.state.ks.us or submitted through the Commission's web site at www.kcc.state.ks.us.

Kansas Gas Service investigates geyser

The Associated Press

HUTCHINSON, Kan. - Kansas Gas Service officials were investigating a gas geyser that erupted over the weekend, six months after explosions killed two people and destroyed two downtown businesses

No one was hurt by Sunday's gas geyser, but officials were surprised by the eruption.

"We don't know for sure, but we think it's a pocket of gas that moved in from a fracture underground of some kind," Kansas Gas Service spokesman Conrad Koehler said Monday. "We're checking all the other locations in town where there were vent wells, and there's no indication of gas at those locations. It was a surprise to everybody."

No other vent wells in Hutchinson or near the Yaggy gas storage field recorded any significant gas seepage, Koehler said.

The gas, under more than 300 pounds of pressure, blew out the vent well's safety valve about 3 p.m. Sunday. Crews were able to ignite the gas later that evening. Another well has been emitting a tiny amount of gas for weeks, but not enough to support a flame

Bill Guy, director of Reno County Emergency Management, said that as long if the gas is burning, it poses little danger to the area.

"If it was leaking out like that and wasn't lit, we might have a problem," he said. "It's a whole lot safer with it on fire like this."

The gas explosions have been blamed on a leak in a Kansas Gas Service storage facility northwest of the city. Gas traveled seven miles from Yaggy field before erupting in gas geysers in Hutchinson on Jan.

17 and 18. Lee Allison, director of the Kansas Geological Survey in Lawrence, said he suspected the cause of Sunday's leak may have been a test where crews allowed pressure in the well to build up, then released it to get an idea of how much gas might still be below. "When you close the well and open it again, that pressure change has much more of a shock to the system than you might get from a small earthquake many miles away," Allison said. "That kind of pressure shock could open up plugged areas near the bottom of the well."

Koehler said gas pressure from the leaking vent has dropped since Sunday, but the flame had not decreased in size by late Monday.

A team of geologists from Tulsa, Okla.-based ONEOK, the parent company of Kansas Gas, was studying data to assess the situation, Koehler said. Kansas Gas also dispatched a gas-sniffing truck to patrol the city's streets.

This is not what anybody wanted, but this is a sign these deep wells are doing what they're supposed to do: intercept the gas and vent it out." Koehler said.

Charles Griffin, who lives near the well heard a hissing sound at

"It was loud enough that it kept us awake last night," Griffin said. "It's obvious there's a problem."

College education plan successful in first year

TOPEKA - The first year of a new college education savings plan in Kansas attracted 14,000 customer accounts and $61 million in assets, State Treasurer Tim Shallenburger said.

The Kansas Learning Quest Education Savings Plan allows parents to save for a child's education without being taxed on earnings if the money is used for educational purposes, said Shallenburger, the program's administrator.

American Century Investments of Kansas City, Mo., manager of the Quest plan, gives parents the option to choose from 18 different investment plans with varying degrees of risk and maturity, said Chris Doyle, spokesman for American Century.

The most conservative track gained 1.2 percent over the past year, and the most aggressive track lost 24 percent.

"In the light of the market, we're quite pleased with the first year of the program," Doyle said in a story for the Topeka Capital-Journal's Tuesday editions.

Shallenburger said one of the greatest benefits of the program is that state and federal governments don't tax the growth of assets. And the state gives residents an annual income tax deduction of up to $2,000 for individuals and $4,000 for married couples filing jointly, for each beneficiary.

After 2001, qualified withdrawals are tax free. The money can be used to attend colleges or technical schools in any state.

The cost of higher education has grown at about 4 percent a year. The average cost of five years of college education in private and public schools in the Midwest is $127,000, or $25,400 a year, Shallenburger said.

The contribution limit in the Quest program is $127,000.

Shallenburger said parents can put in as little as $25 per month if it is an automatic deposit. He said that even at $25 a month, the savings will add up and make a difference when the time comes for their kids to go to college. "We've got to train people to save early," he said.

Men sent to prison for defrauding area banks

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - Two men were sentenced to prison Monday in a scheme that defrauded more than $91,500 from Kansas City area banks.

Joshua Williams, 40, of Kansas City, Kan., was sentenced to 33 months in federal prison to be followed by five years supervised release. He must also pay $91,533 in restitution.

Juan Jose Saenz, 37, also of Kansas City, Kan., was sentenced to 18 months in prison, followed by five years supervised release.

U.S. Attorney Jim Flory said Williams pleaded guilty in April to one count of bank fraud and one count of possessing stolen mail. Saenz pleaded guilt to bank fraud.

Flory also said Williams admitted that between May 23, 1997, and Jan. 22, 1999, he, Saenz and others presented stolen and forged checks to banks, asking that some of the money be deposited and the rest given in cash. Williams admitted that he got blank checks, signatures of checking account holders and other bank account information by stealing from the U.S. mail.

Flory said Williams and his accomplices defrauded banks in Kansas City, Kan., Shawnee, Leavenworth and Mission.

golf, they think of the Scottish game using multiple clubs to hit a small ball into a hole. There is a different way to think of it though. An American game using decedents of the Wham-O Frisbee to reach a target or basket in the fewest number of throws. It's called disc golf and in many ways it's similar to the Scottish game, but it has its own unique personality.

Both disc golf and ball golf have the same goal - to reach the target in the fewest amount of tries possible. Another similarity is the reason for playing. Both disc golfers and ball golfers say they play for the companionship and for the love of the

"There is a certain amount of bonding in the game of golf." Paul Nyberg, disc golf player, said. "It's a good excuse to exercise and spend time with friends."

Gareth Rohr, junior in finance, prefers to play ball golf, but still agreed that any type of golf requires a bond between the players. "I like being outdoors," Rohr said. "Being out with the people that do what you do makes it fun."

The conversations that take place between players during a round of any game of golf also reflect each

> Paul Nyberg, disc golf player

"It's no different than eating food with your friends," Rohr said. "Just whatever is on your mind."

The normal conversations that occur during a round of disc golf are vary similar.

Gary Clift. K-State graduate and a disc golf player, calls it a "worship of words." Disc golf players rarely discuss politics, but they will always quote a movie or song at least once during a round. After nine holes of ball golf, players usually stop in the clubhouse to visit the restroom, buy a snack or just take a break before heading out to play the back nine.

The campus course doesn't have an official clubhouse but does have place to get some refreshments. Hole nine ends near Dickens Hall and hole 10 starts at the front door of Leasure Hall.

In between the two holes are a restroom, pop and snack machines and some air conditioning for the hot days when the players need to rest before playing the final nine

Many factors of disc golf make it stand apart from the game that uses white, dimpled balls. The biggest difference is in the object that flies though the air. In disc golf, there are many choices of discs to use for different types of shots. In ball golf, the ball stays the same, but players use a different club to hit it.

Another big difference is the playing attire. In ball golf, a collared shirt and nice pants are usually required. In disc golf, players can play in anything they feel comfortable in. From ripped jean shorts to sandals to tie-dye T-shirts.

A set of ball golf clubs costs anywhere from $100-$2000. The shoes, balls and bag add another $200. Green fees and membership fees also add on to the price of the

However, one disc for disc golf cost about $10. There is no added expense for clothes, and it's free to play on any course.

"You need at least three discs to play," Clift said. "You need a driver, approach and putter disc. A bag is not necessary for carrying discs, but they can be purchased for about $25-$40. Unlike ball golf, disc golf does not have carts or caddies to help out the players.

There are differences and similarities between both of the types of golf, but they can only be understood by experiencing both of the sports.

Local disc golf courses interest players of many ages

The K-State course offers a more relaxed style of disc golf and the River Pond course is more competitive. They both have 18 challenging holes for disc golf players of all ages to test their skills on.

The K-State course was remodeled in the late 1970s by a group of K-State students who played Disc Golf and Ultimate Frisbee.

"It was here when I got here in 1970," said Gary Clift, a disc golf player and graduate of K-State.

Clift and his friends wanted it to be different so they made it into what is today.

The tee-box for hole 10 is directly out the front door of Leasure Hall. The giant fork statue south of King Hall serves as hole number 13,

The River Pond Disc Golf Course was built in November 1999 by Justin Springer, senior in business management and president of the Manhattan Disc Golf Club, Andy Klaasmeyer and Brandon Heath.

"This course was built so people wouldn't have to play campus anymore," Springer said. "I started playing on campus, but I'm not very Disc golf is similar to ball golf in that player starts from a tee-box and tries to reach a hole in the fewest amount of throws possible.

On campus, the hole is not a hole but a tree or light pole that players try to hit with their discs. The end of a hole at the River Pond Disc Golf Course is a chain basket that players try to land their discs

Due to the large amount of people on campus during the day, most of the disc golf played there is during the evenings or weekends. Players are welcome to play at the River Pond Disc Golf course any time of the day.

"There are too many people on campus during the times I want to play," Springer said.

Paul Nyberg, left, drives his disc on hole nine on the K-State course Sunday during a weekend game of disc golf. Bill Starr, Gary Clift, sitting, and Scott Kohl, right, K-State graduate, watch as the disc flies towards the hole. Hole nine is sometimes called the "hole-hole" because players must make their disc through a hole in a statue outside of Elsenhower Hall.

Mascots offensive to school board members

The Associated Press

TOPEKA - School team names and mascots such as Braves.

Redmen and Warriors are offensive to many American Indians and should be replaced, the State Board of Education was told Tuesday.

"Our people have the right to determine for ourselves what is religiously sacred and what is and is not an honor to our people," Dory Nason, K-State Native American Student Body faculty advisor, said Tuesday

"We are here to tell you that these images are hurtful and they don't represent who we believe ourselves to be," said Nason, a member of the Chippewa Tribe of Minnesota.

After Nason and three others made their case, Chairman I.B. "Sonny" Rundell noted the board can't order the state's 304 www.ksbe.state.ks.us school districts to change mascot names.

Nason urged the board to pass a resolution stating Indian mascots are "unacceptable in an educational environment." Her group estimated there are 33 districts with schools using Indian nicknames and mascots.

SAFETY

"We just make sure we have staff that is visible and available if there are any problems," Closson said.

He said he thinks the smalltown atmosphere makes Aggieville a fun and safe place for K-State students to visit.

"Aggieville has a small own feel," Closson said, "No matter how many people are wandering in and out of the bars, most everyone knows each other. On most occasions it's a safe place to be.

Knowing the people you run into at the bars is important for students who spend their evenings in Aggieville.

Sara Heiney, senior in computer science, eats in Aggieville frequently and goes to the bars about twice a week. She said it is one of the friendliest places in Manhattan.

"I came to K-State because the atmosphere was so much friendlier than other schools," Heiney said.

"That atmosphere is carried over to Aggieville.'

Heiney said the recent stabbing in Aggieville on June 30 doesn't make her think Aggieville is more dangerous, but it makes her think twice about safety issues.

"Every once in awhile bad things happen, even in the safest places," Heiney said. "I just hope it will raise awareness and people will be smarter about all the safety issues they've been taught since they were kids."

Walter said, although he hopes the recent death in Aggieville will raise people's awareness of safety matters, it doesn't make Aggieville a less safe place to be.

"It's sad to say, but sometimes bad things happen - especially in an area like this," Walter said. "I just hope people will do what they can to prevent situations like that from arising again. This should be a fun place to be, not a place where you have to be scared to look at someone or walk across the street."

Closson said he thinks having officers who regularly patrol the area is helpful to maintain a controlled environment, but for the most part 12th Street is a safe place for students to hang out at.

Walter said though there are areas in Aggieville that they know generally have more problems than others, the officers try to patrol all establishments the same. "We try to be fair by not targeting anyone, but we know where to look for the fights and where we consistently see problems," Walter said. "Sometimes Aggieville gets crazy. Sometimes there are fights and confrontations, but sometimes it's really quiet."

Closson said Aggieville patrons have to use their own common sense and follow basic safety tips such as never walking alone.

"Bad things can happen anywhere, and people have to be aware of that," Closson said. "Aggieville isn't a safe haven. People have to be careful."

Kansas Drive is a weekly feature photo taken by a K-State photographer somewhere in the state of Kansas. This series is designed to show a different scene of Kansas that is off the beaten path. The photographer drove around back roads of Kansas to find each photograph. An old road sign allows a burst of sunlight to shine through a hole made by a bullet while warning travelers on West Springcreek Road about the path they are about to take. The sun peeked through the rusty road sign around 6:30 p.m. then fell behind the trees.

Pentagon reduces bombers

BY ROXANA HEGEMAN The Associated Perus

WICHITA - The Pentagon plans no reprieve in its decision to reduce the nation's B-1 bomber fleet, an aide to U.S. Sen. Pat Roberts said Tuesday, contradicting what he said was a misunderstanding by lawmakers who met with Pentagon officials Monday.

Roberts and Sen. Sam Brownback and Rep. Todd Tiahrt had said the decision to reduce the nation's B-1 bomber would be delayed at least 16 months. They based their announcement at McConnell Air Force Base on a meeting with Air Force Deputy Chief of Staff, Lt. Gen. Joseph H. Wehrle, and other Pentagon

"I think it was just a misunderstanding on fiscal as opposed to calendar year, but it's a fairly major distinction," said Roberts' chief of staff, Leroy Towns.

Towns said the lawmakers mistakenly thought the Pentagon would delay its decision until next year. The Pentagon intends to move in fiscal 2002, which begins

Commissioners want current draft of city budget cut

BY SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON Kansas State Collegian

Though the latest draft of the city's 2002 budget is definitely slimmer, at least some members of the Manhattan City Commission want the trimming to continue.

The new budget, presented Tuesday night by Director of Finance Bernie Hayen, cuts more than $500,000, or roughly 2.3 mills, from the last version taken before the commission June 26 that proposed an increase of more than four mills.

The total budget still sits between $56 million and $57 million. Each mill levy is equal to $1 for each $1,000 in assessed property value. and estimated to bring $220,000 in as taxes.

The cuts came from numerous departments, Hayen said, such as $430,790 from general services and $169,690 from parks and recreation. Other cuts were made by eliminating proposed reserve funds for city equipment and capital improvements.

Hayen said he was concerned about abandoning the reserves, but they might return once the economy speeds up again.

"I think it would be a good thing for us to establish at some point... ...but this doesn't seem to be the time to do so," he said.

The cuts are combined at a time when the city has added costs of a Northeast Community Park and the Eureka Valley Fire Station, totaling $35,805, plus an estimated dip in

"I'm going to be honest, It makes me a little nervous," he said.

Still, Commissioner Mark Taussig said the cost is too high.

"While I appreciate the cuts that have already been proposed, I would like to see more cuts," Taussig said.

Taussig said taxes are currently rising faster than most Manhattan incomes and suggested actions like a six-month hiring freeze, tabling several capital improvement projects and cutting costs on upcoming work on the intersection of Kimball and North Manhattan avenues.

Overall, he said he wanted to bring the mill levy down to 41.9, 2.25 lower than the current mill levy. Commissioner Ed Klimek said he would at least like to keep the mill levy at the 2001 level of 44.15. Klimek said he wanted to look at reducing annual raises for city employees and possibly privatizing some city services.

Commissioner Roger Reitz said if cutbacks are to be made, he wants them to be obvious to the people.

"I want them to be seen. I want them to be dramatic," he said. "I want to see things that really make a difference to show how serious we are about austerity."

Klimek said he would prefer the cuts be subtle to the casual observer.

"I'm darn happy if they don't notice it," he said. "That's what

As a work session, commissioners could not vote on the issue at hand, but an agreement was reached that Hayen's version of the budget will be published in this Friday's Manhattan Mercury as per state law 10 days before it is officially considered at the commission's legislative session.

Though publication sets a ceiling for the 2002 budget, City Manager Ron Fehr said the commission still has the option to change the budget at the July 24 and Aug. 14 meetings, as long as the total is equal to or less than the total budgeted.

Power Cat II Corn Maze to open in August

Rogers family prepares for Power Cat II Com Maze to open while making new changes

BY ERIN SCHNEWEIS Kansas State Collegian

Dan Rogers' blue eyes lit up as the airplane circled over the crop field that he and his family have spent hundreds of countless hours and energy on.

Rogers, extension agriculture specialist, said he has been praying for rain for entertainment purposes instead of just primarily agricultural purposes.

It is no secret that the focal point of Rogers' family is what they call the Power Cat II Corn Maze.

The maze uses the licensed K-State powercat logo and allows people to walk through with maps to find their way out of

Rogers said he learned about the idea for a maze awhile back.

"A long time ago I was reading about crop mazes in National Geographic and I thought that it would be fun to do," he

His wife, Bev Rogers, said the six acres of planted corn, which is a football field and a half in length and width, did not go as well as they had expected in its first

"Between the heat and the rainy weather we didn't quite break even," she

The couple, along with their two children, help create questions and trivia boxes that are throughout the maze. This year they are going to have messages for people to unscramble. Sometimes people invent their own games, especially when it is involving groups of people, Rogers said. Rogers said there are a few rules to follow while in the maze.

"You can invent your own game as long as you don't pick the corn or run through your own path," he said. "We are pretty much open to anything."

They also have flashlight nights where people can walk through the maze at Rogers said this proves to be unique compared to the daytime.

"It's a whole different experience going though during the daytime and nighttime," he said

Rogers said people can choose how much time they spend in the maze as

"Some people are in there for 15 to 20 minutes and some people are in there for two hours," he said.

The Rogers family said they have enjoyed their experience with the corn

"It has just been fun and people have a good time. It is kind of a unique experience," Rogers said. "Just based on the comments we've got from the number of people who wanted to make sure that we did it again this year."

Matt Stamey/Collegian

The Power Cat II Corn Maze is located five miles west of Manhattan on Stagg Hill Road at the Intersection of Stagg Hill Road and Ft. Riley Blvd. The maze opens Aug. 31, groups are welcome by appointment after August 18. It is $6 for adults, for more information call 532-6340.

Jardine children participate in reading program

BY APRIL MIDDLETON Ransau Stare University

Reading seven books was easy for Arpit Herbert; the hard part was selecting his prize from the table that had so many choices.

Herbert is one of about 20 children who have attended weekly reading programs at the

Thomas J. Frith Community Center. The summer program is coordinated to give the children of Jardine residents something fun and educational to do while they're not in "These kids need to be reading during the summer," Todd Fertig, area coordinator for the program, said. "This is a fun way for us to help them keep learning and practice reading." Fertig said the program also is another way for the residents to feel like they belong to a community who cares about them and their families. "A lot of families meet each other through their children," Fertig said.

"This is another way for our residents to get to know each other and build that community

Those involved in the program meet at the community center on Tuesdays, for a total of seven weeks. Each week a guest reader is invited.

Fertig said they have invited Coach lim Wooldridge, members of the K-State women's basketball team and Ruth Ann Wefald.

Tuesday evening, Gilbert Davila, Anthony Middle School principal, brought three of his favorite books to read to the group of kids who gathered in a circle around him.

"This is a great way to help these kids practice their reading and let them know we care about them," Davila said. "The program is great and I enjoyed reading to them."

The children enjoyed his reading as well. "He's a good reader, and he's funny," Herbert

When he finished his three books the kids agreed in unison that they liked Shel

Silverstein's "The Giving Tree" the best. After Davila finished reading, the children were invited to check out books, which were bought at discount rates from Hale Library. The next week they can give book reports to Fertig. as well as other program volunteers.

The children receive prizes for the number of book reports they have done. Prizes have

That was where Herbert had trouble last night. The Pokeman cards and a K-State football both caught his eye. He finally decided the football would go home with him.

"I've read a lot of books, and I'm a good reader." Herbert said.

Music store opens doors in Aggieville

BY APRIL MIDDLETON Karreas State Collegius

Music has returned to Aggieville. CD Tradepost, 716 N. Manhattan Ave., opened its doors for business on Thursday.

Cheryl Sieben, director of Aggieville Business Association, said she is happy to have music back in Aggieville. "I think the store will fill a huge void left by the closing of Streetside," eben said. Josh Mooney, store manager, said one reason they opened a store in Manhattan was to offer the students what they couldn't get in Aggieville anymore. CD Tradepost sells music, game machines, games, DVDs

Mooney said business has been steady in their first days of business

"Our business in these first days has actually been above what we projected," Mooney said. "I think Manhattan is responding well to us."

A new communications retailer has also recently opened in Aggieville. Communications Unlimited, 722 N. Manhattan Ave., bought the old TCBY building.

Sieben said that although other merchants in Aggieville sell cellular phones and pagers, the new store is the first to specialize in communications.

"They aren't the first to offer these services and products," Sieben said. "But they are the first free-standing retailer for these types of things.

She said it is a good addition to the area.

"Any business that comes in should be a good addition," Sieben said that although she can't confirm anything there are other businesses who may open in Aggieville soon. "We hope by the time school starts again there will be some new things to see in Aggieville," Sieben said. "There are things in the works as of now."

Gov. Bill Graves speaks at the ground breaking ceremony for the new Mercy Health Center expansion. The center was created five years ago when Memorial and St. Mary's Hospital combined.

Mercy Health Center renovation, expansion reaches second phase

BY JESSICA PITTS Kensas State Collegian

With the official ground breaking ceremony complete, Phase two of the three-phase $56 million expansion of Mercy

Health Center is underway.

The construction, which began more than a year ago, will now be concentrated on Phase two which consists mainly of a new nursing tower. Phase one, which includes expansion of the emergency room and intensive care units is half finished, Ann Harts, vice president of planning and development, said.

"The construction is really coming along," she said. "We are on the tail end of being able to provide quality health care to the residents of Manhattan and surrounding communities."

The ground breaking ceremony was held off until Thursday to coincide with the 5th anniversary of Mercy Health Center.

"We've only had adequate facilities," City Commissioner Ed

Klimek said. "With this expansion we are now at the point where we can put in place cutting-edge facilities.

Those cutting edge facilities will, hopefully, give the center the capability of attracting more specialized doctors, Richard Allen, president and CEO, said.

"We want to be able to deal with all health care needs," Allen said. "With this construction, our hospital with have the technology and configuration to deal with almost anything.'

Allen also said this may be a step in creating a new home for student health services on the K-State campus.

"That is a thought right now," he said. "Of course, with our expansion we are going to be able to assist the students of the university in many ways with combined efforts from Lafene Health Center. It will insure the parents that their children will have access to a variety of health care issues."

The ground breaking ceremony also kicked off the public phase of fundraising efforts, said Charlie Hughes, executive director of the Mercy Health Center Foundation.

Mercy has raised $2.3 million during the silent phase of its effort and hopes to raise about $3.7 million from the local

LIFE LONG DREAM

Satisfaction comes from hard work, persistence

n December 23, 2000, I sat in my parents kitchen in Overland Park and evoked the ghosts from my past.

I ran through the Rolodex in my mind and wrote down every place I worked over the last eight

After scrutinizing Michelle Bertuglia the Peace Corps application, I knew piecing together names of forgotten managers, phone numbers and dates of employment would be the most gruesome and time-consuming task of filling out my the applica-

Going into the Peace Corps has been my life long dream. With the dawn of graduation quickly rising, I knew winter break would be my only time. to finish it. Although daunted by the size of the application and the precision it took to fill out, I knew that if I was going to make my dream come true, it was going to take some hard work.

Making an accomplice out of the massive Kansas City phone book, I dared to call each place two days before Christmas to confirm the names and check for records of my prior employment. Being put on hold more than once, being called crazy for even thinking to gather this information two days before Christmas I refused to let others agitation with me sink

Dialing the numbers in repetition from prior job to prior job and being met time and again with the cranky strained voices on the line I kept whispering my mantra over and over again to myself, "This is for your dream, this is for your dream."

Every since I was a little girl I knew this was something I wanted to do. Over the years I have found very few certainties in life but for me, wanting to go into the Peace Corps had always been one. When asked about plans for life after graduation, for years now I have said, "I want to go into the Peace Corps." I would be a rich woman if I could have counted the number of times people said to me, "That is something I always wanted to do," or "I would love to do that but I am too old." Whenever I would become frustrated with the tedious task of filling out the application, I would remember these peoples responses and keep on working.

This was not something I had thought about doing then chickened out of, no this was it-if they would have me I was ready to sign my life away

Rolodex of my past jobs in order, I traversed down to my dad's and filling, typing and correcting. office and mentally prepared myself for a long afternoon or typewriter. In the still of my dad's vacant office I sat in his secretary's oversized and outdated brown leather chair and letter by letter slowly filled in each blank of the application with the information I had been collecting for days on two with his old-fashioned

From the earliest dates of service to employment history, to volunteer work and language skills I spent the afternoon typing

During those few afternoons of typing, correcting and editing whenever my hands would cramp up and I would find myself longingly looking outside at the crisp white snow just begging to be pounced on, I collected my thoughts. Then quietly cooed my mantra again, "This is for your dream, this is for your dream."

Bleary eyed and fingers crossed after two days of sitting hunched at the typewriter, I had explain the thrill of wanting something so badly and then taking the initiative to actually work for it. The actual process of changing from a spectator to a player.

We all have our own dreams and goals. Mine just happens to be going into the Peace Corps. Regardless in this time and age of easy come, easy go, and instant gratification at every step, I have found that sometimes there can be greater gratification in taking your time, doing things right and taking your strength and energy to reach those goals.

After all, we are only given one chance to step up to the plate to make our dreams of hitting that home run a reality.

Columnist encourages breast cancer awareness

Erin Schneweis

Two years ago this month one of my favorite aunts lost her battle to breast cancer. It was a battle filled with misery and pain that she fought for over a decade.

It is odd the things that you remember when you reflect upon moments of your life.

Moments like finding out that the battle she was engaged in finally came to an end. That she could finally rest in a beautiful, peaceful slumber after being in agony for so long.

Memories like the sadness in my uncles eyes as he sat next to her casket at the funeral.

The tearing sound of my mother ripping out a check for a donation to the American Cancer Society and watching the tears fall softly onto her

A year and a half later, the dull sound of the scissors as my hairdresser cut off seven inches of my hair as a donation for children who lost their hair to cancer.

Helpless is the closest word to describe wearing a pink satin ribbon as a reminder that breast cancer does exist; helpless because you don't know what else to do.

Along with all of those sounds. sights and feelings I made a vow to myself that I would warn others about breast cancer, and more importantly about prevention.

Part of that prevention is encouraging women to do breast self-exams (BSE). The American Cancer Society recommends that all women over the age of 20 examine their breasts once a month. By doing that it allows women to know what is normal with their breasts.

When should a BSE be done?

According to The American Cancer Society's home page women should do a BSE every two or three days after their periods end. They recommend that if women have irregular periods to do the BSE on the same day every month. It is important to keep in mind that just prior to a woman's period or during pregnancy their breasts may be somewhat lumpy or more tender.

How should a BSE be done? One of the most informative web sites that I found was at breastdoc.com. This web site walks women through a step by step program of how a BSE should be performed. Just click on the icon titled, My Breast Health. Then click on the icon titled Breast Self-Exam.

Why should a BSE be done?

The American Cancer Society's web site stated that by the end of 2001 an estimated 192,200 new invasive cases of breast cancer are expected to occur among women in the United States.

> An estimated 40,600 deaths (40,200 women, 400 men) will be the result of breast cancer this year alone.

Why should women get mammograms? The earliest sign of breast cancer is an abnormality that shows up on a mammogram before it can be felt by the woman or her health care provider Breast pain is commonly due to benign conditions and is not usually the first symptom of breast cancer. Numerous studies have shown that early detection saves lives and increases treatment options. The breastdoc.com web site also informs readers about the different types of treatments that patients can experience if they have breast cancer.

Survival rates have increased. In the 1940s there was a 72 percent chance of five-year relative survival, currently there is a 97 percent chance of

It is important to note that survival after a diagnosis continues to decline after this point.

It is essential that women take care of themselves with the same degree as they take care of others. They need to remember that their future is literally in their own hands.

Washington Post chairman dies after suffering head injury

BY NANCY BENAC Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Katharine Graham, who deftly steered The Washington Post through the tumult of the Pentagon Papers and Watergate and built it into a leading force in American journalism, died Tuesday. She was Graham had been unconscious since she suffered a head injury Saturday afternoon in a fall on a concrete walkway outside a condominium in Sun Valley, Idaho.

Her family was at her bedside when she died at St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise, where she had been taken for surgery on Saturday.

As chairman of the Washington Post Co. for two decades, Graham built the paper her father had purchased at bankruptcy auction into a media empire that ranked 271st on the Fortune 500 list by the time she turned it over to her son in 1991. Along the way, she became a force both respected and

"Mrs. Graham became a legend in her own lifetime because she was a true leader and a true lady, steely yet shy, powerful yet humble, known for her integrity and always gracious and generous to others," President Bush said in a

"Kay Graham was a hero - for the way she met the challenge of taking over the Washington Post Company, for what she did with it, for what she stood for in journalism, and for the inspiration she provided to other women," said Louis D. Boccardi, president and chief executive of The Associated Press.

"All of us who knew her were enriched, and the AP was enriched by her service on our board."

The funeral service will abe 11 a.m. on Monday at Washington National Cathedral.

Graham had been working on a book about the history of Washington. She also kept a hand in the news business, serving as chairman of the executive committee of the Washington Post Co. since 1993.

She took over the Post company in 1963 and built it into a profitable conglomerate of newspaper, magazine, broadcast and cable properties, including Newsweek.

Graham often said her life story read like a soap opera. Instead, she chronicled it in a Pulitzer Prizewinning memoir that traced her path from self-described "doormat wife" into one of the world's most powerful women.

Her "first life," Graham said, ended in 1963 when her husband, Philip, who suffered from manic depression, committed suicide at their country home in Virginia.

Philip Graham had been publisher of the Post, then a mediocre newspaper, and his wife had occupied herself with their four children and the life of a Georgetown matron, Suddenly widowed at 46, she stepped into her husband's shoes to take over the Post, at first with timidity but later with sure-footed authority.

In the beginning, she saw herself as little more than a placeholder to keep the paper within the family.

"What I essentially did was to put one foot in front of the other, shut my eyes and step off the ledge," she wrote in "Personal History," published in 1997. "The surprise was that I landed on my feet." Her self-doubt and deference to the men at the Post gradually gave way to a confident

The steadfastness with which she turned the Post into a powerhouse newspaper was most visible during the turbulent 1970s, in the showdown over the Pentagon Papers, a secret study of the Vietnam War, and in the Post's dogged pursuit of the Watergate scandal that brought down President Nixon.

At the critical moment in 1971 when she made the decision to publish the Pentagon Papers, in defiance of government protests and against legal advice - but after The New York Times had already broken the story - she gulped and said, "Let's go. Let's publish."

More certain of her decision in retrospect, she wrote, "Publishing the Pentagon Papers made future decisions easier, even possible. Most of all it prepared us - and I suspect, unfortunately, Nixon as well - for Watergate."

Watergate. Far ahead of other news organizations on a momentous political story, the Post felt the brunt of presidential wrath and drew criticism from readers who felt the paper was out to get Nixon. "It was a particularly lonely moment for us at the paper," Graham recalled. "I sometimes privately thought: If this is such a hell of a story, then where is everybody else?"

Journalism aside, Graham's career was equally notable for the business sense with which she built the Washington Post Co.

"If you just measure her as the manager of a business and forget the soap opera stuff, her record is terrific," son Donald said in 1991 as he prepared to take over.

women rugby players participate in South Africa tournament

BY JESSICA PITTS

Kansas State Collegian

A simple call from South Africa made a dream come true for Jennifer Ross and four of her teammates.

The five women, all members of the K-State women's rugby team, will leave for South Africa to participate in the first international women's rugby tournament in the country Aug. 7-9.

"I was so excited when I got the call," Ross, senior in criminology, said. "We will be the only international team participating which makes it a great honor."

Ross will be joined by teammates Jennifer Eicker, Marissa Snapp, Kelly Carmody and Amber Cox. A player from Nebraska and a player from Seattle will round off the United States team

"It is going to be a wonderful opportunity for us to come together as a team and represent our universities and our country," Ross said.

The women were extended the invitation to the tournament after placing in the Westerns Tournament last spring. The team was ranked 6th in a seven state district. Ross said.

"It really amazed me we got the call," she said, "but I know we are capable of proving we should be in the tournament."

The trip will cost the team $15,000. K-State provided $500 and the rest of the money was raised by the women.

"We had a raffle, and we have had a lot of individual and business sponsors," Carmody, K-State graduate, said.

"We did everything we could to be able to participate in this opportunity.

Cox, junior in social science, said the trip will be about more than just competing.

"We are definitely going to compete in the tournament," Cox said, "but we are also going with the intention of helping the people of South Africa develop their rugby skills."

South Africa recently introduced women's rugby to the country, Cox said.

"It is something new to them," she said, "and a great opportunity for us."

Abortion protesters withstand heat, police warnings

BY ROXANA HEGEMAN Associated Press Writer

WICHITA - Protesters marched peacefully outside an abortion clinic Tuesday morning, but scorching weather prompted cancellation of a planned afternoon parade.

Their right to march at George Tiller's clinic was cleared by a federal judge Monday after the city denied them a parade permit.

"People were fried this morning. It looks bad if somebody dies," said Pat McEwen, spokeswoman for Operation Save America.

A heat advisory was issued Tuesday for Wichita, with the heat index by noon at 103 degrees and rising.

Earlier in the day, Rev. William Witt, an elderly priest from Youngstown, Ohio passed out on the sidewalk across from the clinic. His colleagues said Witt, clothed in black clerical garb, had been fasting and had gotten little sleep. He declined medical treatment.

A second man also suffered apparent heat-related problems, said Deputy Chief Stephen Cole. The heat is also forcing the police department to relieve more often their own officers, many who are wearing bullet-proof vests.

"Heat is a big issue for us," Cole said. "It is a big issue for our personnel and no doubt for the protesters.

Prior to the start of the first march tensions had been growing outside the clinic of Dr. George Tiller, one of the few clinics in the nation where late-term abortions are performed.

Countless small confrontations ended peacefully as activists on both sides of the abortion issue jockeyed for choice spots along the street near the clinic or bullied their way through crowded sidewalks. But the initial slow-moving march continued without incident.

Police issued 20 parking tickets, plus another five tickets for minor pedestrian offenses such as not using the sidewalk, standing on the roadway and impeding the flow of traffic, Cole said. Those are related to abortion protesters handing out pamphlets to cars at an intersection near the clinic after the ignored a police warning.

A person at the head of the march carried a banner reading "God loves the unborn," and other marchers had similar anti-abortion signs.

On the sidewalk in front of the clinic, abortion rights advocates shouted to the protesters, "Shame on you" and "Keep your rosaries off my

The protesters made two passes in front of the clinic, then dispersed. Newman said there were 560 marchers, and police reported no arrests or incidents. Fewer than 150 abortion rights activists were at the

By mid-afternoon only a dozen or so anti-abortion activists remained at the clinic, seeking relief from the scorching afternoon sun under trees.

Before the march began, abortion rights supporters cheered whenever a van - its tinted windows hiding the faces of the women it carried - made its way into the clinic. Abortion opponents yelled, "Jesus loves you" and "There are options" as they watched behind the fenced sidewalks where police kept demonstrators.

Linda Cramer was 18 when she had an abortion at the Tiller clinic. Now 36, the Wichita woman is among the anti-abortion activists carrying a sign saying she aborted her only child. She can no longer have children.

"I just want women to know it is the worst thing I have done in my life," Cramer said as her husband stood nearby.

A few yards along the same fence line, 43-year-old Susan Johnson of Wichita said she wanted to make sure the clinic stays open.

"I have a 21-year-old daughter who had to go through with an abortion when she was 16," Johnson said. "I am not sure where she would be today if this wasn't an option for

Her daughter is now in her fourth year of college.

Tiller's clinic was bombed in 1985 and was the focus of massive protests during the first Summer of Mercy, in 1991, Tiller himself was shot and wounded outside the clinic in 1993.

In 1991, the Summer of Mercy led by firebrand Randall Terry and Operation Rescue - ended with 2,700 people arrested after more than 45 days of protests. The group has since distanced itself from Terry and calls Itself Operation Save America. Among those arrested for blocking the entrance to the clinic back then was Elizabeth Horan of Wichita. Horan, now 93, was back protesting on the sidewalk across the street from the clinic. She was in a wheelchair. carrying a sign that read, "It's not a choice.

"I've been coming here for years and years and years," she said. "I don't know how many years - my memory is not as good as it used to be." A relative newcomer to the antiabortion movement is airline pilot Jamison Murphy. The 34-year-old Wichita man was carrying around a sign that read, "Atheist for Life." Murphy looked on from the sidewalks after parade organizers asked him to not march in it with his

"Without God, life is the most important thing," he said. "That makes it even more important because that is all there is." Lisa Stockham, 22, came out to join abortion rights supporters Tuesday.

"As a young person, I realize how important it is my rights as an individual aren't taken away," she

Meanwhile, the KPL call center is fielding more than 40,000 extra calls because of the new requests from students. To help make the transition easier and quicker, students can contact KPL now to apply for electric and gas service.

Commission approves municipal court move

BY SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON Kansas State Collegian

Despite concerns from residents and some commissioners, the Manhattan City Commission approved an acceleration of moving the Manhattan Municipal Court into the former Riley County Police Department building on 600 Colorado Street.

Passed by a 3-2 vote Tuesday night, the action allows consultant Brent Bowman and Associates to proceed into Phase two tasks such as design development, construction documents and bidding for the project.

The original plan was to complete most of the Phase I tasks like building assessment before moving to Phase II, but the city was informed that the municipal court must vacate its current location in the Colony Square building on Poyntz. Avenue. It is estimated the court will have to leave within 30 days to six months.

Commissioner Brad Everett said the move to the former police administration building, which would increase the court's available space from roughly 2,400 rented square feet to 4,000 square feet, is necessary.

"We've got to use this as a court," he said. "We got the notice. We're being kicked out."

Commissioner Roger Reitz, one of the two commissioners who voted against the action, said the proposed location simply Isn't enough to expand.

"I have a feeling it's going to be too small too soon," he said. Reitz also cited resident concerns in the area about how the court's arrival would affect parking.

Bonnie Lynn-Sherow, Manhattan resident, said her worry is that parking measures will eliminate a popular park area west of the proposed location. Instead of a public square with a court building, she said it might develop into a municipal building with a big front lawn.

"What I'm concerned about is giving up the park for parking." she said.

Commissioner Mark Taussig. who also voted against the measure, said he didn't want the move to keep taking city funds. At present, the project's total budget is roughly $300,000, but that does not include later actions like demolition of the former jail building.

Brent Bowman, representing his firm, said that would probably cost at least $150,000 on its own.

"I think we need to do the whole job and not say, 'We'll do this job later," Taussig said.

On the other hand, Commissioner Ed Klimek said the move would free the city from roughly $25,000 in annual rent payments to Colony Square.

"We can take control of our own destiny by owning that building and facility," he said.

Veterinary building under arson investigation

Arson is suspected in a fire that started in a faculty member's office at Coles Hall Friday morning. No one was injured, but damages were estimated between $85,000-$400,000.

Kumsan State Collegian

A fire that damaged parts of the Veterinary Medical Sciences Building Friday morning is being investigated for arson.

The State Fire Marshall's office will lead the arson investigation, Robert Mellgren. assistant director of K-State Police, said, and the Manhattan Fire Department and K-State Police are assisting.

"We are still trying to follow leads," Mellgren said. "Things are moving slowly right now, but all the evidence is currently pointing towards arson."

No suspects have been named in the case yet, Mellgren said, and no time frame is being set in the investigation.

"We will use as much time as we need to thoroughly investigate the possible crime," he said. Things like this can either move really fast or take quite a bit of time."

The fire started around 6 a.m. Friday in Coles Hall in the office of a faculty member. The office, 335 Cole, was essentially gutted by the fire, Steven Galitzer, director of public safety, said.

Galitzer said other portions of the third floor of Coles Hall sustained extensive smoke damage

No dollar amount has been set on the damage, but Veterinary Medicine Dean Ralph Richardson said the final cost could range between $85,000-$400,000.

"It is hard to tell right now," Richardson said. "We are currently in clean-up mode and in the process of determining which equipment will have to be replaced."

Coles Hall is used primarily for research. It is separated from the veterinary hospital and teaching units and around 75 people work in the building.

No one was injured in the fire including 33 cats who live on the third floor. The cats are used in research, Richardson said, and are housed in a separate area with its own ventilation system.

Richardson said he was optimistic that the building will be functioning at its full level in two weeks.

"It will take some time to get back to that level, but we are working hard to get there," he said. "We will have to continue with our work while they are investigating the arson."

Tires under investigation for safety

BY NEDRA PICKLER The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Federal salety officials opened an investigation Tuesday into 2.7 million tires that Ford Motor Co. has used on the F150 pickup and as replacements in its recall of Firestone

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration said there have been at least 338 claims of tread separation on the P235/70R16 size of the General Ameri550 AS tire - the same problem that plagued some Firestone tire lines and led to last summer's massive recall.

The claims include seven crashes, two of them rollovers, that reportedly caused a total of 17 injuries. No deaths have been reported, the agency said.

NHTSA's action was triggered by information collected by congressional staffers investigating the safety of Firestone tires.

At a hearing last month, House Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman Billy Tauzin announced that some of the tire brands that Ford Motor Co. was using to replace Firestone tires had higher rates of claims for injury and property damage.

He would not name the tires until NHTSA had a chance to review the committee's analysis. NHTSA refused to identify the other 10 lines that it examined but decided not to investigate.

Tauzin, R-La., said in a statement that "NHTSA is taking an important step today toward better safeguarding American olbert Hills golf course is hosting more than 100 teenagers this week for the National First Tee Club Academy:

The First Tee Club, established by Earl Woods and senior PGA golfer Jim Colbert, teaches teenagers from inner cities about the game of golf while incorportaing important life skills.

When Colbert Hills was constructed, a 9-hole course was built specifically for the First Tee Club. Every summer, students fill out applications and participate in interviews in hopes for the opportunity to come to Manhattan. The national committee selects several students from each chapter.

Tom Shea, adult representative of the Tampa, Fla. chapter, said the students stay in the K-State dorms in order to give them a college experience.

"Many of these kids have never seen a college campus or had this kind of experience," Shea said.

However, during the daytime, the golfers focus on their game. Sunday afternoon, Colbert, ranked in the PGA top 15, conducted a short demonstration on the importance of visualization in the game of golf.

When you play golf, you have to be out of your body to analyze and visual." Colbert said. "When you have concentration, things disappear so you can focus on the job in front of you.

Colbert also gave the students a preview of the week ahead on the course.

"This golf course will offer you the challenge of any golf course in the world. You will have a lot of different swings and looks."

After Colbert finished his demonstrations, he challenged seven participants in a contest of hitting the ball closest to a hole. The winners were allowed to choose any shirt from the clubhouse as their prize.

Fourteen-year-old Matt Crace from Piketon, Ohio was one of the winners. However, he did not name his golf skills as the most important thing the First Tee program taught him.

K-State student workers evaluate safety

BY ERIN SCHNEWEIS Kansso State Collegian

With the recent accident involving K-Student student employee Danette Gaitros last week, several issues of safety are being discussed on campus.

Charlie Thomas, director of Bramlage Coliseum, said that employees are trained with safety measures. He said employees are shown how to operate vehicles and the custodial crew is also informed on proper ways to dispose of needles that are used by diabetics and to clean

Thomas said that due to the fatality that occurred last week, he is unaware if there will be any changes in the policy

"That will be finalized before long," he said.

He said that any time there is a serious accident or fatality the Kansas Department of Human Resources has safety coordinators who determine the action that should be taken after they meet with university officials and evaluate

"They are not there to assess blame, but to inspect the situation," he said. Thomas said that in the 14 years that he has served for Bramlage there has never been any

Funeral services for Danette Gaitros, senior in management and marketing and international business, were Monday morning in Wilson.

Gaitros died Friday morning, July 20, at Saint Francis Hospital in Wichita, Kan. Gaitros was working on a student maintenance crew in the K-State athletic complex when she fell from a moving utility vehicle July 16.

She was flown to Wichita following initial treatment at Mercy Health

"She was an excellent worker, a wonderful person and an exceptional student." Charles Thomas, director of Bramlage Coliseum, said. "We're going to miss her a whole lot."

Gaitros had worked with Bramlage for about three years.

Brad Millington, maintenance staff, who hired Gaitros, said she was a pleasure to work with.

"She enjoyed her work and always took what she was doing very seriously," Millington said. "She made friends with everyone she worked with. She was one of the nicest people

I knew." Gaitros graduated from Wilson High School in 1997

At press time no arrangements had been verified for an on-campus memorial service.

Moving season brings stress

BY APRIL MIDDLETON Kansas State Collegian

Business may be booming for companies who offer moving services, but stress is rising for the students who only have a week to get out of old apartments and into new ones.

"Moving is too much stress," Natalie Jerauld, senior in public relations, said. "If I ever have to do it again, I hope it isn't when all of the other students are moving. It's almost time, but I'm totally not prepared."

Jerauld is in the midst of moving season, along with hundreds of other students.

"It's such a pain to move and so hard to get things organized at this time of year," she said.

Jerauld's current lease ends July 31, and her new lease begins Aug. 1. However, she isn't moving into her new apartment until the next weekend. "I have to be out of my apartment that day, but I can't get into my new one until for a couple of days," she said. "I didn't have a clue what to do with my stuff for those four or five

Lucky for her, her new roommate was in the same situation. However, since most units only rent in month intervals, they will Jerauld and her roomate will pay for the unit for the entire month.

Storage units are full throughout Manhattan for at least the next month.

Von O'Briant, who operates Aztec Self Storage, 5004 Murray Road, with his wife, said all 234 units in their complex are at complete compacity.

"We've been full for at least 90 days," O'Briant said. "It's hard to get things at this time of year, because I don't know from day-to-day what we will have open.

He said they don't take reservations, so people just have to keep their eyes and ears open for units that might become available

Expires 8-15-01

"This is prime time for us," O'Briant said. "When we get units that come open they usually are gone within two to four hours."

The situation for rental moving vehicles is the same.

Zann Wilson, manager of U-Haul Co., 8070 Highway 24, said students who haven't reserved a truck are probably out of luck

She said most of their available trucks have been reserved for at least two or three months.

"Many students wait until the last minute and get mad because we don't have what they need when they want it," Wilson said. "We need to know months in advance.

Wilson said that between May and August are really busy months.

"If we have plenty of notice we can get the equipment that is needed," she said, "but the time is getting to late for that now.

Manhattan resident fights custody battle for daughter

All she wants is to get her daughter back

Claudine Dombrowski, a Manhattan resident, is fighting for the custody of her 6-year-old daughter, Rikki, who is currently living with her MORE INFO? father in Topeka. For more infor-Dombrowski said she divorced her husband. Hal Richardson, in February 1996 because of severe and repeated domestic violence towards her and her daughter.

During the following years, Rikki went back and forth between living with her mother and father. In August 2000, a judge awarded sole custody to Richardson. She went from being a full-time mother to only being allowed supervised visitation one hour every Thursday and Saturday. She has to pay $9 for each visit to her daughter. She said she suspects Rikki is still being abused at her exhusband's home.

"When I look at her now, she's almost unknown to me," she said.

"Her eyes are sunken in and she has lost her smile. She is dead inside. There is no more spirit left

Richardson had no comment. Richardson's lawyer, Don Hoffman, said he could not comment on many aspects of the case because there are matters still pending in the courts, but Rikki's safety is not an issue.

"Her safety has never been seriously questioned the entire time she has lived with Richardson," Hoffman said

Dombrowski is waiting for the Topeka courts to set a date for a custody hearing where she will try to win back her daughter. She said she is trying to get as many people as possible to attend the hearing because she feels it will help her case.

"If we have enough of a turn out, I know I will get her back," she said. "I think the judge will do the right thing and follow

Her cousin, Katrina Mukherjee from San Antonio, runs the site for

"It started out by just posting some e-mail attachments to a website, and then it became a mission," Mukherjee said.

She first posted the site on July 13, a Friday. Then, she said, she sent e-mails to everyone and anyone she could think of with the website link.

"When everyone got to work that Monday and checked their email. That's when the response to the site exploded," Mukherjee said,

The site receives 2,922 hits a day and has had 9,187 individual visitors, she said

The site has also had visits from 18 different countries.

Besides information about the custody battle, the site includes several graphic photos displaying a battered Dombrowski and her daughter.

Mukherjee said the photos get people's attention.

"You can hear her say that your ex-husband beat her," she said. "But how do you believe what she said? This is not a thwarted mother or some drug addict mom messing with the system. This is real."

She said she feels bad if the pictures trigger bad memories for other battered wives, but hopefully they will be motivated to help.

"Sometimes it gets really frustrating," she said. "But our whole reason for doing this is that someone somewhere, will get the message, care and be in a position. to actually help."

Already Dombrowski has been flooded with e-mails from children's advocate agencies, battered women and others who are offering assistance. Senator Kent Glasscock has even written a letter offering assistance, Mukherjee said.

Along with the onslaught on responses, there have been problems. After its first weekend, the there was an attempt to hack into the site and Dumbrowski's computer received eight computer viruses through e-mails that supposedly offered help, she said.

"I think we are pissing a lot of people off with the site," she said. 'That's okay. It's an emotional issue. As annoying as viruses are, we have dealt with them. You can't expect everyone to be on your side.

Advisers lack advice

Trusting students rely too blindly on advisers for assistance

If I was flexible enough to kick my own ass, I think I would do it. My problem? I was too trusting of a person.

Het the titles of adviser and professor make me think that these individuals with red parking permits are without flaws. That they don't make mistakes.

Above all I have let people who I've only been around for a few minutes every semester help deter mine my schedule.

As a transfer students from a community college I have accepted the fact that over 25 hours of my education have went down the

So, in order to have a relaxing final semester in the fall I decided to take a class this summer.

Over 190 class hours later, $290.40 in class fees and a $70 book later I've learned a lesson the hard way. As I was told later I took the class as "a learning experi-

A learning experience that doesn't count to my undergraduate

When it was suggested that the class would work for my schedule I vaguely looked over the class and thought it would work.

So what does this mean? Two more classes to take during the fall. Two more chances to pay tuition

Part of the blame resides in the reflection I see in the mirror. Instead of just taking advice I should have questioned it, instead

This is what I consider to be a huge loss. As Mark Twain once wrote, "the size of a misfortune is not determinable by an outsider's measurement of it, but only by the measurement applied to it by the person specially affected by it. The king's lost crown is a vast matter to the king, but of no consequence to the child. The lost toy is a great matter to the child, but in the king's eyes it is not a thing to break the heart about."

This reminds me of a sociology professor who once asked what a college education was all about. One student in the class replied, "Pursuing the American dream."

The professor was quick to point out that it was pursuing the American conformity.

Conformity in the sense of writing down the correct, and seemingly only, answer for a test. To listen to lectures, hand in assignments and go on our merry

No. 21 sparks thoughts, respect

It's not my favorite number - 44 is. But it's the number every student waits to and who have probably called 21 theirs say as their age -21. I wanted to give the number 21 some credit in this column by letting you know what it means to me and some famous 21s in sporting history. First of all, seven is a multiple of 21 and my favorite multiple. Any football fan knows that three touchdowns equals 21 points, 21 was the first game of cards that I learned to play, and I soon found out that it was called Blackjack.

The first time I beat my brother in anything athletic was a basketball game where the object is to reach 21 points as quickly as possible. Sticking with the sports theme, here is a list of some famous, and not so famous athletes who bear the number 21 on their jersey.

Lets start with the locals. The Big Twelve's and K-State's all time three-point shooter Kim Woodlee called 21 her number. She sank 285 treys with the number 21 on her back. To the men's side, the 6-foot 9-inch junior from Split, Croatia, Ivan Sulic, is the number 21. He grabbed 38 rebounds last year as the number 21.

Each year I designate a K-State football player as "my boy." Last year it was Roderick Cartwright, in 1998 it was leff Kelly. Well, this year "my boy" will be none other than number 21 DeMarcus

This 5-foot 11-inch junior from Irving, Texas, was coached in high school by Jim Bennett, brother of K-State's defensive coordinator Phil Bennett.

Now the people who are paid to play for many years. The Washington Redskins recently acquired a 195-pound corner back who played college ball at Florida State. The 6-foot 1-inch showboat Deion Sanders proudly calls 21 his number. Half of a set of twins who plays for the New York football Giants displays the number who's digits add up to three on his uniform. 26year-old Tiki Barber, from Roanoke, Va., broke the 1000 yard rushing barrier after rushing for 1,006 yards last season. To the hardwood.

Seven-foot, 260 rebounding machine Tim Duncan has the the number on his back as well. Duncan has grabbed the 738 defensive boards in his career. The master from Serbia, who listens to the Red Hot Chili Peppers and the Rolling Stones, bares the number 21. Vlade Divac, the 7-foot 1-inch center for the Sacramento Kings. Old timer Dominque Wilkins,

Atlanta Hawks, wore

To the grassy field. Tara Koleski, a 5foot 2-inch forward for the Womens United Soccer Association's San Diego Spirit, wears the number that is 42 divided by two. Did you know that this is

Cal Ripken Jr.'s

21st year playing Major League Baseball? Now for who I feel is the most famous 21 of all. A man who lost his life in attempt to save others. This hero played his entire 18 year major league baseball career for the Pittsburgh Pirates. He played in two world series, was MVP of the 1971 series and was National League Batting Champion four times. He hit 240 home runs between 1955-1972. He was awarded 12 Gold Gloves in his all to short of a life. On Nov. 14 1964, exactly 34 years before K-State beat Nebraska in football 40-30, Roberto Clemente married Vera Cristina Zabala in a small town in Puerto Rico. Proud

The plane, which was carrying medical, food and clothing supplies to earthquake stricken Nicaragua, went down due in part to bad weather. A previous plane full of supplies sent by Clemente also had not reached the victims. Vera and friends begged him not to take the trip, but he was determined. His plane went down off the coast of Puerto Rico and his body was never

I couldn't agree more. One of Roberto's dreams, the Roberto Clemente Sports City, is one part of the legacy he left behind. Visitors to Carolina, Puerto Rico, are greeted by a 12-foot statue as they enter into a 304-acre sports complex. Roberto is remembered as one of the greatest athletes and humanitarians of all time.

Why, you might wonder, would I pay tribute to a number that has two prime multiples? Today is my 21st birthday and for the rest of the year, my favorite number will be 21, then it will go back to the number Fred McCoy, a K-State basketball player from the early nineties,

So good luck to "my boy" Faggins, Duncan, Woodlee, Sulic, Sanders, Barber, Divac, Koleski, Ripken, Wilkins and may Clemente's 21 be remembered forever.

Former president disappointed with Bush's choices

The Associated Press

PLAINS, Ga. - In a rare instance of one former president criticizing a current one, Jimmy Carter is taking issue with just about everything George W. Bush has done in office.

Carter criticizes Bush for not pressuring Israel to withdraw from the Gaza Strip, for threatening to abandon the anti-ballistic missile treaty and for not supporting human rights more strongly.

He says Bush has ignored moderates in both parties and calls Bush's proposed missile defense shield a "technologically ridiculous" idea that will "reescalate the nuclear arms race."

"I have been disappointed in almost everything he has done," Carter told the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer in an interview last week from his home in Plains.

Carter also was critical of President Clinton during the fellow Democrat's administration, calling the Monica Lewinsky scandal an embarrassment and disparaging Clinton's policy in North Korea and Haiti.

Carter is "a guy with strong views, and I think that's always been the case," said presidential scholar Charles Jones of the University of Wisconsin. "What surprises me is a kind of a sweeping critical analysis, at what has to be said is an early stage.

Carter noted that he had volunteered to be one of the few Democrats at Bush's inauguration because he was optimistic about the administration.

"I hoped that coming out of an uncertain election he would reach out to people of diverse views, not just Democrats and Republicans but others who had different points of view," Carter said.

"I thought he would be a moderate leader, but he has been very strictly conforming to some of the more conservative members of his administration, his vice president and his secretary of defense in particular.

"More moderate people like Colin Powell have been frozen out of the basic decision-making in dealing with international affairs."

He was also critical of Bush for not calling for the removal of Israeli settlements on the West

"George Sr. took a strong position on that issue, and so did I," said Carter, whose offer to mediate the conflict was declined by both the Israelis and the Palestinians.

Recent K-State graduate shares Millionaire experience

Although I didn't get in the hot seat, and play the game with Regis, I guess my fifteen minutes of fame haven't expired yet.

I graduated from K-State in May, and for those of you who have never had a class with me, (there are a few of you out there - "Six Degrees of Separation" starring Kevin Bacon) there is something that should be known; I have been an loyal fan of "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?"

I have been trying to qualify by playing the phone game to become a contestant. I qualified over 40 times, but I never got a phone call from the show. It has been extremely

At the beginning of this year, Millionaire added a new twist to their qualification process. They added auditions in cities all across the country. To be able to attend an audition, you needed to call a tollfree number to get a PIN number for a chance to audition. I always got a busy signal, and consequently, I got more frustrated.

Well, this brings us to the week after graduation. Millionaire was having an audition in Albuquerque, N.M. So, I decided to try again to get a PIN number. I dialed the number. Beep, beep, beep ... busy.

The next thing I know, I hear Fred's voice. Fred is the man who tapes all the introductions and qualifying information for the phone game and for the auditions. Then, he said the words I was waiting to hear, "Your PIN number is."

The day of the audition I was ready to face the challenge. I stood in line, gave my PIN number and personal information. In turn, I was given the number - 96, an information application, the rules and a green Millionaire pen.

I went into the audition room and sat down. While I was waiting, a man sitting a few rows behind me fainted. He was diabetic and had not eaten. OK, if I wasn't scared enough. I was petrified at this point.

The assistant producers came into the room and announced that over 180,000 people tried to call to get one of the 375 PIN numbers for the three audition times in Albuquerque.

The test contained the format that they use for the fast finger round. Put the following in order, the earliest, the most recent etc. I was done five minutes before time was called, and I rechecked my answers.

At this point, the producers came back into the room and announced that they had the results of the test. They said, "If we call your number, then you have made it to the audition round. If we do not call your number then you must leave. and thank you for coming.

They began announcing the numbers. Then they said, "96"! I felt this rush of happiness and excitement coarse through my body. Out of 140 people in my section, 42 people passed.

Next we all got our pictures taken and they gave us Millionaire postcards that we had to self-address. If you received the postcard 2-3 weeks after the audition, then you would be part of the audition pool. The producers then told us about the audition round. They would call us up five at a time, we would play a version of the game, and they would ask us questions to reveal something about our personalities. We also were being videotaped.

Well, two weeks went by, and no card had arrived. The very next day while at work my husband called me. He said, "You are going to New York!"

ABC had just called to tell me that they wanted me to be on Millionaire and to call them back to speak with them about it. I immediately went into shock. All my hard work, nervousness and tenacity had finally paid off. The whole experience from that point on was very surreal.

The next thing on the agenda was to get my travel companion and phone-a-friend lifelines organized. I could bring one companion with me to New York to share in my Millionaire experience. I asked my good friend Leslie, a kindergarten teacher at the Marlatt Elementary school to accompany me to New

Then the happy day arrived. I was on my way to New York City and my Millionaire extravaganza. We flew to New York and had a private limousine drive us to our hotel. Later that day we had our contestant meeting

I met the other contestants, and began to size up the competition.

They told us that since Millionaire began airing, six million people have tried to get on the show. Only 1,900 people have been contestants.

> and their companions were driven to the studio, checked in and brought to our dressing rooms. At this time we met the producer who had been working behind the scenes on our behalf. After that, they took us down to the studio for rehearsal. We were assigned a seat. My seat was five and directly to the left of where Regis would stand. We then got to practice getting in and out of the hot seat.

Then we practiced the fast finger round. Unless you've been a contestant on Millionaire, you have no idea how difficult it is to punch in the correct letters to each question. First of all, there are lights flashing in your face, the buttons are square, they can be double punched very easily and the music is very loud.

When we finished our rehearsal, we were taken to the dressing rooms for make-up. The producers walked us all down to the studio behind the audience seating. It was very loud and very exciting. My adrenaline started to pump. Then one of the executive producers announced the name of each contestants and we each walked onto the stage to take our seat.

When they said my name, I walked out, smiled and waved to the entire audience. We were ready to start taping, and they introduced Regis Philbin. There he was, Regis Philbin standing right next to me.

Regis waved to the audience and made some jokes. Then he was escorted by a producer to each contestant for a greeting. I stuck out my hand and said, "Hi Regis, I am Kelly Buszek." He repeated my name so that he pronounced it correctly. The producers then said we were ready and it was time to begin the show. The music began to rise, the lights were flashing and the audience was applauding exuberantly. Regis then walked out on the stage with the hold over contestant, and announced, "Let's play, Who Wants to be a Millionaire!"

Finally, they announced all the contestants for my show to the audience. When the red light on the camera blinked for the fifth time. I was on television. I smiled, waved and knew this was my moment. My place in the Millionaire sun.

Well, needless to say, I didn't make it to the hot seat. I got two of the fast finger rounds correct, but, I wasn't fast enough. The last round, I double hit a letter, so my name was not in lights at the end. However, the person who also had been trying as long as I had, made it to the hot seat, and I was very happy for her.

I haven't given up hope though. I still love the show. I still play the game, and I know that I'll get go to New York again. I can try to qualify beginning in September.

So, between now and then, I'll learn some more interesting facts, play the game on-line, practice my fast finger technique and plan out my strategy. Because the next time, when I get on Millionaire, Regis will say, "Ok, you know the rules, you know the lifelines, let's play Who Want's to be a Millionaire with Kelly Boszek!"

Shuttle stuck in space lands late on Tuesday

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. —
Space shuttle Atlantis and its crew of five steered toward a late-night landing Tuesday after rain forced them to spend an extra day in orbit.

During the mission, the crew delivered and installed a $164 million portal for spacewalkers aboard the international space station.

A line of showers prevented Atlantis from returning to its home base Tuesday morning and added a 13th day to the flight, which had already been extended by a day because outfitting the portal, or air lock, took longer than expected.

"As you can imagine, we're hoping that you get a little bit better luck today with the weather," Mission Control told the astronauts after waking them up with the Duran Duran song "Hold Back the Rain."

The air lock and its highpressure oxygen and nitrogen tanks were installed during three spacewalks last week by shuttle astronauts Michael Gernhardt and James Reilly II.

Deaths by medical error overestimated in study

CHICAGO — Alarming studies suggesting that medical errors kill close to 100,000 U.S. hospital patients each year probably overestimate the problem, with the real total perhaps 5,000 to 15,000, researchers say.

In a study in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association, researchers said the previous studies were flawed because there was little consensus among the doctors consulted on what constitutes a deadly error.

Also, the previous studies did not consider whether the patient would have died even if the error hadn't occurred.

Two years ago, a blistering report by the Institute of Medicine said that medical mistakes in hospitals kill up to 98,000 hospitalized Americans a year, and it demanded major changes. The mistakes included prescription drug errors and misused or malfunctioning equipment.

The numbers drew the attention of government officials — earlier this month the Health and Human Services Department made a series of recommendations to reduce medical errors — and hospitals nationwide have implemented new protection.

But while improvements are welcome, the number of medical errors that actually cause death is probably overblown, researchers said.

Dr. Rodney A. Hayward, who led the new study as director of the VA. Center for Practice Management and Outcomes Research in Ann Arbor, Mich., estimates that between 5,000 and 15,000 deaths annually are due to errors. But he acknowledged those numbers are rough estimates.

"This is not to suggest that medical errors are unimportant," Hayward said. Instead, he said: "The argument is to be careful about what you implement."

National teen birth rate continues to decline

ATLANTA — The teen birth rate fell to a record low in the United States last year, continuing a steady drop that began in the 1990s, the government said Tuesday.

For every 1,000 girls ages 15 to 19, there were 48.7 births last year — the lowest rate in the six decades the statistic has been kept, the National Center for Health Statistics said.

Last year was the ninth straight year the rate has declined. It has dropped 22 percent since 1991.

"The continued decline in the teen birth rate is very encouraging news," said Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson. "When teens postpone parenthood, it benefits not only their lives, but society as a whole."

Analysts have attributed the steady decline to a broad range of factors, including more awareness of HIV/AIDS, increased abstinence and the economic boom of the 1990s, which led many teens to put off starting families so they could take jobs.

Lou Douglas series speakers announced for fall semester

BY JAMIE BARRETT

Kannay Stote Collegion

Four speakers for the Lou Douglas Lecture Series on Public Issues will focus on the theme "Voices for Social Justices" for the fall 2001 series.

Juliette Beck, policy analyst for Global Exchange, Carl Rosen, District 11 president of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, Olga Idriss Davis, assistant professor in the Hugh Downs School of Human Communication at Arizona State University and Dr. Steffie Woolhandler, associate professor of the Center for National Health Program Studies, the Cambridge Hospital/Harvard Medical Center, are the planned speakers for the fall semester.

The series, sponsored by UFM Community Learning Center, was started to honor Lou Douglas, a former K-State professor of political science. Olivia Collins, lecture series coordinator, said the the fall speakers will were selected because they speak to some sort of social justice in the world.

"These speakers address human rights issues, social justice issues and public policy issues," Collins said. "These topics honor Lou Douglas in a appropriate way."

Collins said the speakers are all scheduled to speak in a presentation that is open to the public, but several

Monday, Oct. 1 — Carl Rosen, District 11 president of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, will present "Putting the Movement Back in the Labor Movement."

Monday, Oct. 22 — Olga Idriss Davis, assistant professor in the Hugh Downs School of Human Communication at Arizona State University, will present "Performing Survival: The Tulsa Race Riot of 1921: Narrative Discourse of Cultural Memory, Struggle and Resistance."

Monday, Nov. 5 — Dr. Steffie Woolhandler, associate professor of medicine at Harvard University and co-director of the National Health Program Studies, the Cambridge Hospital/Harvard Medical School, will present "A National Health Program for the United States."

All lectures will be at 7 p.m. in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union.

of the speakers are also scheduled to make presentations to various K-State classes.

"This semester we are trying to pick some classes that are relevant to each speaker and have them make presentations to that class as well," Collins said. "Most of the speakers are very pleased to spend time with students in a learning environment."

Collins said the lecture series is organized in a way to make people think about the topics, and this year they hope personal interaction with students will help to stimulate interest in all students.

"The intent of the lecture series is to get people to think about what the speakers have to say," Collins said. "We want to get people to act and make changes. We are believers that a students education should reach outside of the classroom. Student should try on what they are learning and these speakers will hopefully help them do that."

and production changes to these tires since they were first made in April 1995. NHTSA said the claims rates for tires made after July 1998 were extremely low, and there have been no injuries attributed to those tires. Ford officials did not immediately return calls for comment, but have said the company is using the newer tires as replacements on its vehicles.

"Nevertheless, to assure that relevant information is not missed. NHTSA's investigation will consider the safety performance of the entire population of these tires, rather than only those produced prior to those design changes," NHTSA said in a statement.

Tauzin spokesman Ken Johnson said while the General Ameri550 that NHTSA is investigating had 124.4 tread separation claims per million tires produced, the same size Wilderness AT tire had 17.4 per million.

He said none of the six tread separation claims on those tires resulted in injury.

"For many consumers, that can't be too comforting," he said. "Clearly the next step is up to

Ford," Johnson said. "Company officials said repeatedly that they wanted hard

Well, they've got it now."

NHTSA is wrapping up its yearlong investigation into more than 55 million Firestone ATX, ATX II and Wilderness AT tires.

Safety Administration: Bridgestone/Firestone Inc. has already voluntarily recalled 6.5 million of the
